

THE ORIGINS OF "TWO CHINAS"

The Real History Channel

The woefully incomplete (from a historical perspective) official narrative of the "One China" policy offers us the ideal opening to address an interesting yet mostly forgotten historical question - namely, what is this controversy about "one China" vs "two Chinas" all about? Like so many other of the world's hot spots and problem areas, this situation was engineered by the One Worlders such as Harry Truman's Secretary of States from New York's notorious Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) -- George Marshall (CFR) and Dean Acheson (CFR). Providing important intellectual cover for their folly was "scholar," Owen Lattimore (CFR), The New York Slimes and The Washington Post.

1: George Marshall (2nd from left), as Special Envoy to China and later as Secretary of State, was among the handful of "foreign policy experts" who engineered the fall of China to Stalin's agent, Mao Tse Tung (on right). // 2. The "two Chinas" controversy remains a challenge because the US is committed to the "defense" of Taiwan.

During World War II, China's American-allied Nationalist government (led by Chiang Kai Shek) and China's Stalin-allied Communist rebels (led by Mao Tse Tung) put aside their differences (at least partially) and focused on fighting the Japanese. Unbeknown to Chiang Kai Shek, Roosevelt and the gang of Leftist moles who accompanied him to the historic Yalta Conference in February of 1945 were already planning to betray him and hand disputed Manchurian (Northern Chinese) ports -- which Chiang thought China would get from Japan -- over to Stalin's jurisdiction upon completion of the war. The "price" that Stalin had to pay to get his foot in Manchuria was to break his non-aggression treaty with Japan, and join the war in Asia no later than 90 days after the end of the war in Europe which was rapidly coming to an end. The deal also stipulated that the US would supply hundreds of boatloads of additional arms to help the Soviet effort in Asia.

True to his word, (heavy on the sarcasm there) Stalin joined the war exactly 90 days after Victory in Europe Day, on August 9, 1945 -- the same day as the 2nd atomic bomb was dropped on Japan, an already defeated nation that has been trying to negotiate a surrender. "Thanks Joe! We couldn't have done it without ya!" (extra heavy on the sarcasm there.)

Faced with the dreadful prospect of firebombs and atomic bombs raining down upon their defenseless cities and a Soviet declaration of war, Japan had no choice but to surrender unconditionally. Soon afterwards, the Soviets opened up their strategic Manchurian ports and supplied free American-made arms to Mao's boys. Captured Japanese munitions depots were also turned over to the Reds.

1: At the 1943 Cairo Conference, FDR & Churchill promised Chiang that China would get Manchuria after the war with Japan ends. 2: But at the 1945 Yalta Conference in Crimea (USSR), the two leaders, behind Chiang's back, agreed to give those key Manchurian ports to Stalin! 3: In August of 1945, Mao (l) and Chiang (r) set their difference aside to toast to Japan's defeat. Poor Chiang -- who had foolishly waged war against Japan at FDR's behest -- had no idea what his "allies" had in store for China.

The years between 1945-1949 witnessed further betrayals of Chiang's Nationalists by the US State Department. Under the protective cover of NY Times & DC Post puff-pieces about the "agrarian reformer" Mao and the "corrupt" Chiang, the Globalists at State tilted the playing field towards Mao. Thanks to a US arms embargo, the Nationalists began to run low on ammunition as the Reds remained Soviet-supplied. In 1948, Congress voted $125 million in military aid to Chiang. The left-leaning Truman administration responded by delaying the aid with bureaucratic "red tape" for 9 months. During that time, China collapsed and the demoralized Nationalists escaped across the Taiwan Strait to the Chinese island of Formosa, which became known as Taiwan, or "free China."

In a 1950 speech, the much-maligned Senator Joseph McCarthy (R-WI) minced no words in talking about the tragedy that had just befallen China. Speaking of the operatives in Truman's State Department, McCarthy stated:

"Communists have sold 400 million Asiatic people into atheistic slavery."

Joseph McCarthy's 1952 speech on the Senate floor, later published as "America's Retreat From Victory," ripped the George Marshall to shreds for "losing China."

Chiang's Taiwan became free and prosperous as Mao's mainland descended into genocide and remained relatively backward for decades to come. And that, dear reader, is why many (not all) of the folks in Taiwan say that there are "two Chinas," while the mainland Chinese insist that there is only "one China."

From our perspective, this is a matter for the Chinese people to resolve, not America. Given the ironic fact that the modern incarnation of "Communist China" is now so pro-business, pro-tradition, pro-religion and pro-peace that Chiang would actually like it, while Mao wouldn't even recognize it, the "two Chinas" should reunite with Taiwan retaining a degree of autonomy -- as is the case with Tibet and Hong Kong.

Again, it is none of our business. The interference of American "foreign policy experts" in Asia has caused enough harm. But we thought "youse guys" would find the history interesting.

1: 2015: Chinese President Xi Jinping and Taiwanese President Ma Ying-jeou wave to journalists before their meeting in Singapore. The "two Chinas" are not enemies, but nor can it be said that they are friends. The controversy remains a "hot spot." // 2: A Taiwanese "activist" kicks an image of Xi to protest the Taiwan - China talks.
