

Home / Labor And Employment / Wrongful Termination

/ Constructive Discharge: Were You Forced to Quit Because of Intolerable Working Conditions?

WRONGFUL TERMINATION

Constructive Discharge: Were You Forced to Quit Because of Intolerable Working Conditions?

By Lisa Guerin, J.D., Boalt Hall at the University of California at Berkeley

If you were forced to quit for illegal reasons, you may have a claim for constructive discharge.

Talk to a Local Wrongful Termination Attorney

75219

Get Started

Have you ever felt like storming into your manager's office and saying, "I've had enough and I quit!"? If so, you're not alone: Many employees quit or resign because their working conditions have grown intolerable. If you were forced to quit your job due to illegal working conditions, it's called a "constructive discharge." If your employer tried to push you out for illegal reasons, you may have grounds for a wrongful termination lawsuit, even if you technically quit your job.

Wrongful Termination Law Firms in Dallas, TX change location

Kilgore & Kilgore, PLLC

4.8/5.0

View Phone
Contact

Hallett & Perrin, P.C.

4.9/5.0