

VOLUME 62 September 2015

So it has been a quite year for me art wise with a family illness in the first half of the year leaving little time for commitments like exhibitions and workshops. I did work on my entry for the Dare to Differ biannual contemporary Art Quilt exhibition with the idea that if I didn't finish it I could always put it in the next one.

I did complete my entry titled "CBD Bojagi" and wrote a blog about its creation along the way but I can't publish this until the opening night. The quilt was inspired by the crackling pattern of window film on the rear of the Wakefield Hospital which I visited a lot late last year and the technique of Bojagi which I learnt at the Geelong fibre forum last year. The images below are of the window film and the shadow cast by the jacket I made in the workshop. These two images combined in my mind to make a street map quilt idea. The invitations for Dare to Differ came out last week and I am privileged to have a detail picture of my quilt on these. See the invite on page two. Can you recognise the street map?

The opening night for Dare to Differ is Friday October 2nd at 6.30pm. See you there

Cheers

Samantha
