mom and stepdad's favorite country song.

"We had our house in Massachusetts and an orchard, and at the end of the driveway there was a sign that said 'Huckleberry Heights.' We came here and had the sign here ... it fits, and I like it," she said.

Cowles said she didn't know all the history of the building, but from what she'd been told, the former owner loved to bake.

So does the current owner, who said she doesn't remember learning to bake and certainly didn't plan on becoming a bakery owner at 16.

"College was four years away and high school was for four years," she said. "I had no plans of owning my own business at all.

"I've had plenty of people tell me I can't do it. There are millions who will tell you you can't do something. You have to believe in yourself."
