

CONSUMER LAW

HANDBOOK

2015-2016

HOUSTON BAR ASSOCIATION

CONTENTS

Resolving Disputes.....	3
Contracts	6
Warranties.....	9
The DTPA: Consumer Protection From Sellers.....	11
Purchasing An Automobile.....	15
Car Buyer Check List	20
Repossession.....	24
Credit Card/Debit Card Liability	27
Debt Collection	31
Judgment.....	33
Payday Loans	34
Credit Reports — How To Protect and Repair	35
Telemarketing Fraud.....	38
Insurance	42
HIPAA.....	45
Landlord/Tenant Relationships.....	48
Homeowner Rights.....	54
Resource and Referral Numbers	56

The handbook is divided into topics affecting consumers in a question and answer format. All of the issues and rights of consumers cannot be addressed in this handbook. We hope this gives a broad overview of your rights and remedies.

This handbook is based on Texas Law and is issued to inform and not advise. This is a general summary of the laws as they existed in January 2015. This is only general and basic information, and exceptions may exist. You should seek legal advice from an attorney of your choice to advise you in your particular situation.

FOREWORD

Consumer law covers a broad spectrum of legal issues, from contracts to landlord/tenant rights, from warranties to credit liability. In determining the most relevant topics to include within the scope of this handbook, authors from the Houston Bar Association's Commercial and Consumer Law Section turned to several sources: common questions asked during Legalline, the HBA's call-in advice program; local consumer advocates and reporters; and their own experience as consumer law practitioners.

As we purchase goods, use services, seek shelter, provide for our future security, and generally go about the daily task of interacting in a commercial society, we all are consumers. Inevitably, we will have questions, concerns, and problems regarding those goods and services. We hope this handbook will provide information and resources to make you a knowledgeable consumer.

Laura Gibson
2015-2016 President,
Houston Bar Association

The Houston Bar Association gratefully acknowledges the contributions of the following people: Kristen Baker Bates, Kristy Gabrielova, Seth Jaffe, Eric Kirkpatrick, Jeff Kitchen, William Mejia, Michael Poynter.

Updates for 2015-2016: HBA Consumer Law Committee

Illustrations by C.P. Houston.

Local funding and distribution provided by The Houston Bar Association.

Seventeenth Printing. Copyright © 2016 Houston Bar Association. All rights reserved.

CONSUMER LAW HANDBOOK
The Consumer Law Handbook is a project of the Houston Bar Association and the HBA Consumer Law Committee

RESOLVING DISPUTES

If I have a dispute with a merchant, what can I do?

Generally, most disputes with merchants can be settled by contacting the merchant and describing to the owner or manager what it is that you are unhappy about regarding your purchased goods or services. Sometimes this is not enough, and you may need to take other steps to resolve your dispute. A registered letter carries with it a message of commitment to your complaint and has a greater chance to end up in the hands of those who can help solve your problem. Some suggestions, which are explained below, are:

1. Send a letter by registered mail;
2. File a complaint with the Better Business Bureau and/or State Attorney General's Office (send a copy of the letter to the merchant);
3. Mediate your dispute with a third party; or
4. File a claim in justice court (sometimes referred to as small claims court).

When should I write a letter?

If your dispute cannot be resolved by a simple visit or telephone call to the merchant, write a letter to the merchant detailing your complaint. Also, send the letter to the manufacturer of the product if the dispute concerns goods and not services. Your letter should be clear and concise. You should give the merchant information such as where and when you purchased the goods or where and when the service was provided. If possible you should also provide the name or anyone that assisted you at the store. For example, tell the merchant you purchased a Brand X four-slice toaster on January 2, 2014, at the Jiffy Store located at Elm and First Streets in Houston. Send a copy of your receipt for the purchase of the product with your letter. If you cannot find the receipt and if you paid by check or credit card, send a photocopy of the cancelled check or credit card receipt. Explain what is wrong with the product and tell the merchant what you want. "I would like a full refund of my money." "I would like to have the product repaired so that it works as it was represented." Give the merchant a reasonable but definite time to respond to your letter — for example, within thirty days after the date of receipt of your letter.

Send a copy of your letter to the manufacturer of the product. Often, the product will include a warranty or booklet which will tell you where to send letters to the manufacturer. If the product does not include such information, address the letter to the Consumer Complaint Department at the manufacturer's address.

Be sure to send your letter by registered mail or certified mail, return receipt requested. You may do this by going to your local post office and filling out a green card and certified mail receipt. The post office will help you with this process. The cost to send a registered letter is around $10.00. Always keep a copy of the letter, mail receipt, and other pertinent documents for your files. Do not send any original documents.

When should I file a complaint with the Better Business Bureau or the State Attorney General's office?

The Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan Houston accepts complaints about businesses from consumers. Many consumers inquire about a business's status with the Better Business Bureau before dealing with a merchant. Reputable merchants do not want thick files of complaints that may discourage future customers from dealing with them. If you file a complaint with the Better Business Bureau, send a copy of the complaint to the merchant. This act may provide added incentive for the merchant to address your problem. You may also submit a complaint with the Better Business Bureau online. The address of the Better Business Bureau is:

Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan Houston
1333 W. Loop South, Ste. 1200
Houston, Texas 77027
Phone: 713/868-9500
Fax: 713/867-4947
www.bbbhou.org

When you make a complaint to the Better Business Bureau, make a complaint to the Consumer Protection Division of the Texas State Attorney General's Office. You may submit your complaint in person, by mail, or electronically through the website. The address of the Texas State Attorney General's Office is:

Texas State Attorney General's Office
Consumer Protection Division
P. O. Box 12548
Austin, Texas 78711-2548
Phone: 800/621-0508
www.texasattorneygeneral.gov/consumer/

Houston Regional Office
Phone: 713/223-5886
808 Travis, Suite 1520
Houston, Texas 77002-1702

What is mediation and how can it help me?

Mediation is a process in which an impartial person, the mediator, facilitates communication between the parties to promote understanding among the parties, reconciliation, and settlement. Unlike other forms of dispute resolution in the courts, mediation is non-binding. There is no fact-finding, decision or opinion by the third party mediator. One primary advantage to mediation is the ability of the parties to maintain responsibility for and control over their own dispute. The mediator facilitates in (1) defining the issues; (2) removing obstacles to communication;

(3) exploring alternatives to resolution; and (4) reaching an agreement. A mediator will allow each side to state their case and will provide each side an objective opinion of the strengths and weaknesses of the case. This can help facilitate a settlement by allowing each side to hear the strength of their case in a non-adversarial setting.

If you have a complaint against the provider of services or a merchant of goods, resolving your disputes before going to the courthouse is most probably the least expensive and most efficient way to resolve your dispute. Harris County has the Dispute Resolution Center that provides mediation by trained volunteer mediators. The process provides the parties with an opportunity to express emotions or frustrations, which may be hindering negotiations, and to address underlying concerns in a controlled environment. Those involved present information to the mediator who discusses the issues with the parties as they work towards a solution. All parties have an equal voice in the process. The meeting usually lasts about two hours. This is a free service provided by the Houston Bar Association. To find out more about the Dispute Resolution Center, visit their Web site at www.co.harris.tx.us/drc/; write Dispute Resolution Center, Inc., 49 San Jacinto, Suite 220, Houston, Texas 77002-1233; call them at 713/755-8274; or fax to 713/755-8885.

When should I use justice court?

If you have clear legal rights, many merchants will settle your claim before it is necessary for you to take legal action. However, if you have a strong case but attempts to settle out-of-court fail, justice court (formerly known as small claims court) can be an inexpensive and easy way to settle the dispute. Justice court gives you an opportunity to present your case directly to a judge or jury without an attorney. However, it can involve more time and expense than you may want to expend. Evaluate your claim and your commitment to seek relief before taking legal action. Justice court is appropriate for claims of $10,000 or less. If you are successful, you will be awarded your actual damages and your costs. You do not need a lawyer to file a claim in justice court. After you decide to sue in justice court, you must determine where to file your complaint. Generally, you must file your claim in the justice court where the business or person you are suing is located. Look in the phone book for the justice of the peace court where the business or person is located. The clerk of the court can help you with questions. Go to the court with the name of the person you want to sue or the agent of service for the business. (The Secretary of State will have the name for the agent of service for most companies— State Capitol Room, 1019 Brazos, Austin, Texas 78701, 512/463-5701). The court will give you a petition to complete. When you complete your petition, you will file it with the court with a fee (about $100, which includes filing and service fees). The court will have a sheriff or constable serve the defendant. If the defendant denies your claim, you will be given a trial date and an opportunity to present your facts. The defendant has a right to bring any claims against you within the court's jurisdiction. Such claims might include failure to make payment. Be prepared, clear, and to the point. Bring all the necessary evidence — the product, the receipt, and any witnesses besides yourself. The judge or jury will listen to both sides and decide who wins.

How do I collect a judgment?

If you are awarded a judgment, it will become final if not appealed within 21 days. Once it is final, you may demand that the defendant pay the judgment. If not paid promptly, you may request from the court that an abstract (or summary) of the judgment be prepared so that you may record the abstract in the county real property records. The abstract creates a judgment lien (which is valid for ten years) on any non-exempt real estate that the defendant owns in the county where the abstract is recorded. The abstract may encourage the defendant to satisfy the judgment. If not, the defendant will have to satisfy the judgment before selling non-exempt property covered by the lien. There are other more aggressive ways to collect your judgment (or to encourage the defendant to voluntarily pay), including levy of execution on the defendant's personal property. A levy of execution requires the court to issue a writ of execution and a deputy county constable serves the writ on the defendant. The writ specifies that if the defendant will not voluntarily pay the judgment, the constable must seize (and sell at auction) so much of the defendant's non-exempt property as necessary to satisfy the judgment. Texas law exempts certain assets from execution (including a homestead and up to $30,000 worth of an individual's personal property). However, corporations do not get to claim any exemptions. If these methods do not work, there are other remedies available to attempt to reach the defendant's assets, including attachment, turnover, and garnishment.

How do I find an attorney to handle a dispute?

If your attempts to resolve your dispute by negotiations are unsuccessful and you are not interested in, or think you are not able to, pursue your claim in justice court you may consider hiring an attorney to handle the dispute on your behalf. The Houston Bar Association has a legal referral program to assist in finding an attorney. The Houston Bar will put you in contact with a local attorney that will provide an initial consultation for $20. You can find out more about the Houston Bar referral service by calling (713) 237-9429 or (800) 289-4577 or by visiting their website at hlrs.org.

CONTRACTS

What is a contract?

A contract is simply a legal term for a promise that the law will enforce or otherwise acknowledge as legally significant. Contracts may be written or oral. It is important to recognize that the law will not enforce every promise someone makes.

When does the law enforce a promise?

Under the law, a promise is usually enforceable only if it is given in exchange for something. This legal principle, commonly referred to as “consideration,” requires both parties to the agreement to give something up of value for the agreement to be enforceable. For example, a jeweler promises to sell a ring to a buyer for $300. This promise is enforceable because both parties have given up something of value: the jeweler is to give up the ring while the buyer is to give up $300.

Does a contract have to be formal?

No. As a general rule, if you agree to do something, in exchange for someone’s promise to do something else, there is a legally enforceable agreement. For the most part, the law will enforce every agreement that the parties intended to be binding. A handwritten or typed contract is not required for there to be an enforceable contract, with the exception of certain categories listed in the “Statute of Frauds” section below. Stated simply, if each party appeared to intend legal consequences when they made promises to each other, they probably are legally bound.

My friend promised me in writing to give me a $100 gift. Is that promise enforceable?

Usually not. The mere fact that someone has promised in writing to give you a $100 gift does not mean that you can force that person to give you the $100. The general rule is that promises to make a gift are not enforceable. This is because both parties have not agreed to give up something of value. Remember, the legal doctrine of “consideration” requires both parties to the agreement to give up something of value for the agreement to be enforceable. Here, your friend has agreed to give up $100, but you have not agreed to do anything in return. As a result, this promise is not enforceable.

Sometimes a situation arises where someone who has been promised a gift has relied upon the promise to his or her detriment. For example, assume your friend promised you a $100 gift so that you might buy an expensive shirt. As noted above, such a gift is usually non-enforceable. If, however, you relied on your friend’s promise, went to the store and bought a $100 shirt, you might be entitled to enforce your friend’s promise. The reason for this is because the law does not want to penalize you for relying to your detriment on your friend’s promise in just the way he should have foreseen.

Does a contract have to be in writing or signed to be enforceable?

The law provides that most contracts do not have to be in writing to be enforceable. Oral contracts have long been used in Texas, and they continue to be enforced today. Many agreements are sealed by nothing more than a handshake. Make no mistake about it: such agreements are usually enforceable just as if there was a written contract between the parties. However, some contracts are considered more important than others, and there is a law called the Statute of Frauds that requires certain contracts to be in writing. The types of contracts that must be in writing to be enforceable are described below.

What is the Statute of Frauds?

The Statute of Frauds is a law that requires four major categories of contracts to be in writing: (1) contracts for the sale of land; (2) contracts for the sale of goods for the price of $500 or more; (3) contracts that cannot be performed within one year from the time of the contract; and (4) contracts to pay the debts of another. To enforce these types of contracts, it is necessary that there be some writing sufficient to show that a contract has been made. Here's an example. Seller decides to sell his motorcycle to Buyer for $700. The parties reach an oral agreement. Several days later, Buyer changes his mind. Under the Statute of Frauds, such a contract must be in writing because the agreement involves the sale of goods with a price of $500 or more. Because the agreement is not in writing, Seller cannot enforce the oral agreement against Buyer.

What kind of writing is required under the Statute of Frauds?

A writing will satisfy the Statute of Frauds if it contains: (1) the identity of the contracting parties; (2) a description of the contractual subject matter; (3) the major terms and conditions of the agreement; and (4) the signature of the party against whom the contract is being enforced. The signature may be handwritten, typed or printed, and if so intended, a party's initials will suffice.

What is the purpose of the Statute of Frauds?

The Statute of Frauds is designed to provide reliable evidence of contract terms in the event of a dispute. It also prevents misunderstandings or misrepresentations about the actual terms or existence of the contract.

Are there any exceptions to the Statute of Frauds?

Yes. In certain cases, performance of a party's obligations will take a contract that is otherwise unenforceable under the Statute of Frauds and make it enforceable. For example, suppose Buyer orally agrees to purchase a $2,000 custom-made dining room table from Seller. After Seller spends weeks building the table, Buyer says he has changed his mind and doesn't want the table. The agreement is for the sale of goods that cost more than $500, so it should be in writing. What happens? Is the Seller out of luck? Under the law, if the party seeking enforcement of the agreement (in this case the Seller) can show that he acted in reliance on the oral agreement, and has suffered a substantial detriment for which he has no adequate remedy, the agreement will be enforced. In this case, Buyer would therefore be forced to pay the $2,000 for the dining room table.

How long do I have to change my mind after I sign a contract?

In most situations, once you sign a contract you are bound by its terms. While many people believe that they have the right to change their mind for up to three days after they sign a contract, that is not the law in most cases. There are only a few instances in which you have three days to change your mind, such as contracts that are solicited at your residence. In most other cases, the law will force you to honor the contract as soon as you sign it. For more information on the limited availability of a three-day right to cancel, visit <https://www.texasattorneygeneral.gov/cpd/the-3-day-right-to-cancel-a-purchase>

How old does someone have to be to enter into an enforceable contract?

A person of any age can enter into a contract. But Texas law holds that the contracts of a minor (that is, someone under the age of 18) are generally voidable at the minor's option. That means that a minor can enforce an agreement he or she enters into with an adult. However, an adult cannot enforce an agreement entered into with a minor. This rule discourages adults from entering into contracts with persons under 18 years of age.

Should I put an agreement in writing?

It is always a good idea to put an agreement in written form. As noted above, certain types of contracts must be in writing to be enforceable. Therefore, if you are entering into an agreement for real estate, an agreement for the sale of goods valued at more than $500, or an agreement that cannot be performed within one year, be sure to have a signed, written agreement. Otherwise, you will not be able to enforce the agreement. Even when the law does not require an agreement to be in writing, you should take steps, if at all possible, to put the agreement into writing. There is no need for a long, computer generated contract. A few words on a napkin oftentimes will suffice. A writing provides evidence of the contract and clarifies the party's obligations. Remember, "Better safe than sorry."

What damages are available if someone breaches a contract?

Every breach of a contract entitles the injured party to sue for damages. The general theory of damages in contract actions is that the injured party should be placed in the same position as if the contract had been properly performed. Thus, the injured party should be compensated in money for the loss of the bargain. Because damages are designed to compensate the injured party, not to punish the breaching party, punitive damages are not available in breach of contract actions.

Am I entitled to my attorney's fees if I hire a lawyer to prosecute my claim?

A party is generally entitled to his or her attorney's fees from the defendant if he or she hires a lawyer to prosecute a breach of contract claim and later prevails in court. (This does not apply to most tort actions such as negligence.) However, most cases are settled, and as part of the settlement, most parties pay his or her attorney's fees. You are responsible to your attorney for his or her attorney's fees regardless of the outcome.

WARRANTIES

What is a warranty?

A warranty is a guarantee that the buyer will get what he paid for. Most people think of a warranty as the booklet in the glove compartment of their car or the tag on their new washing machine, but there are many other kinds of warranties as well. Warranties are affirmations of fact or promises; mere "sales talk" or puffing is considered opinion, not an enforceable warranty. For example, the statement that a particular car gets "30 miles a gallon" is a warranty; the statement that a vehicle is "the most awesome car in the world" is merely considered opinion.

What kinds of warranties are there?

1. Express Warranties

An express warranty is almost anything said about the product or service that the buyer relies upon when he buys it. An express warranty includes the booklet or tag entitled “Warranty,” but can also arise from a sales pitch, an advertisement, or a sample or model. It can be written, oral, or may even arise by conduct. It can arise between neighbors in the sale of a used lawnmower just as easily as between a consumer and a manufacturer in the sale of a new car. “This lawnmower is as good as new” is an express warranty.

2. Implied Warranties

An implied warranty is one that the law imposes automatically. It need not be written, spoken, or agreed. If the seller says nothing at all about warranties, they will still arise. In fact, most written warranties actually take away some of the rights a consumer might otherwise have. Here are some different kinds of implied warranties:

a. There is an implied warranty of title, which means that the buyer has the right to take the goods free of the lawful claim of anyone else. This becomes important if someone buys a car that turns out to be stolen, or a boat from a neighbor that the neighbor has not fully paid for.

b. There is an implied warranty of merchantability, meaning that the thing bought is fit for the ordinary purpose for which goods of that kind are used—a chair must be fit for sitting, a broom for sweeping, a ladder for climbing.

c. There is an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, which means if the seller knows or has reason to know that the buyer intends to use the good in some specific way when he sells it, and knows the buyer is relying on him to make the right choice, the good must be fit for that purpose as well. In that case, there may arise a warranty that a chair be good for standing on, a mop for painting, or a broom for doing a pole vault.

d. There is an implied warranty of good and workmanlike services, meaning that the services purchased must be rendered in a competent, effective way so that the consumer gets what he bargained for. A consumer who pays for maid service is entitled to receive a clean house; a consumer who pays to have his house painted is entitled to a good job, with no paint on the windows or the car in the driveway; a consumer who brings his car in for an oil change is entitled both to the oil change and to get his car back without oil on the seats.

3. Special Statutory Warranties

The Texas Lemon Law is not a traditional warranty, but is properly thought of in the same terms. It applies to the sale of new cars, and is designed to protect consumers when they buy “lemons,” which are cars that have frequent, unrepairable issues. If the seller is unable, after a “reasonable number of attempts,” to repair a defect that either creates a safety hazard or significantly reduces the market value or use of the car, then the seller must either replace the car or accept the return of the car and refund the buyer’s purchase price (less a reasonable allowance for the consumer’s use). For more information on this law, see the section of this booklet dealing with purchasing an automobile. Keep in mind that most consumers filing complaints under the Texas Lemon Law lose, indicating that you should consider other options with an attorney before filing such a complaint. Other options include alleging the lemon law complaints under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act. For more information on the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act., see the section of this booklet dealing with that act.

There once was a court-created implied warranty of habitability in the lease of a residence, which meant that the house or apartment had to be suitable to live in. Lack of utilities, raw sewage, and even lack of heating or cooling might render a dwelling uninhabitable under the right conditions. The law now imposes a statutory duty upon landlords to repair such things, and these statutory duties have largely supplanted the implied warranty of habitability. For more information on tenant rights and remedies, see the section of this pamphlet entitled “Landlord/Tenant Relationships.”

Can a seller avoid or disclaim an express warranty?

Strictly speaking, it is almost impossible for a seller to get out of an express warranty. However, written contracts sometimes contain a clause saying that “no other warranties” have been made in connection with the sale. This means that the seller is making no express warranty, but often the manufacturer is. You would be likely to find such language in a contract to buy a new or used car, to shield the dealer from extravagant claims made by overzealous salesmen. Other common clauses limit the relief available for breach of an express warranty. For example, many car warranties provide that the only remedy for breach of warranty is repair or replacement of defective parts and that consequential and incidental damages are excluded. These clauses limiting recovery are generally enforceable.

Can a seller avoid an implied warranty?

An implied warranty can often be “disclaimed,” but the legal requirements are different for disclaiming different warranties. The warranty of fitness for a particular purpose may be disclaimed by general language, such as “There are no warranties which extend beyond the description on the face hereof.” However, the warranty of merchantability can usually be disclaimed only by language that specifically mentions “merchantability.” The expressions “as is” or “without all faults” will be sufficient to disclaim most implied warranties if the buyer was given an opportunity to inspect the goods before purchase. Written language in a contract disclaiming either the warranty of merchantability or fitness for a particular purpose has to be “conspicuous,” which means obvious and easily identifiable on the face of the document.

The warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose are most commonly disclaimed. The “fine print” on the form contract a consumer signs when he purchases a car often contains a disclaimer of these two warranties, as do many other purchase contracts. Without this disclaimer, a seller of a new car would be liable if the vehicle had an unresolved defect in the car at the time of sale. It is possible to disclaim the warranty of title, but the courts frown on this and it is very difficult to do. Only in rare circumstances is a seller of goods not held responsible for conveying good title to a buyer. Even auctioneers have been held liable for the sale of goods without good title.

The warranty of habitability generally cannot be disclaimed when a residence is sold. The warranty of good and workmanlike services in home construction contracts may not be disclaimed, but can be superseded or replaced by the parties’ agreement if it sufficiently provides for the quality and manner of the desired construction. The remedies under the Lemon Law can never be disclaimed.

THE DTPA: CONSUMER PROTECTION FROM SELLERS

The Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act (“DTPA”) gives consumers a legal means against sellers for false, misleading and deceptive business practices. Arguably, this law is the most powerful weapon available to Texas consumers. If someone violates the DTPA, he may be held liable for up to three times your damages plus all of your court costs and attorney’s fees.

Essentially, acts of a seller that are misleading or deceptive potentially violate the Act. Moreover, the intentions of the seller to mislead or deceive generally are irrelevant for liability purposes. If a seller thinks he is telling the truth about what he is selling, but in fact it is a misrepresentation, the seller is still liable. In short, the DTPA imposes a duty on merchants not to make any representations unless they are certain of their truth – it is not up to you to figure it out. The current DTPA lists 27 things that are considered false, misleading, or deceptive. Some of the DTPA violations include:

- Passing off goods or services as those of another;
- Causing confusion or misunderstanding as to the source, sponsorship, approval, or certification of goods or services;
- Causing confusion or misunderstanding as to affiliation, connection or association with, or certification by, another;
- Using deceptive representations or designations of geographic origin in connection with goods or services;
- Representing that goods or services have sponsorship, approval, characteristics, ingredients, uses, benefits, or quantities that they do not have, or that a person has a sponsorship, approval, status, affiliation, or connection which he does not;
- Representing that goods are original or new if they are deteriorated, reconditioned, reclaimed, used, or secondhand;
- Representing that goods or services are of a particular standard, quality, or grade, or that goods are of a particular style or model, if they are of another;
- Disparaging the goods, services, or business of another by false or misleading representation of facts;
- Advertising goods or services with intent not to sell them as advertised;
- Advertising goods or services with intent not to supply a reasonably expected public demand, unless the advertisements disclosed a limitation of quantity;
- Making false or misleading statements of fact concerning the reasons for, existence of, or amount of price reductions;
- Representing that an agreement confers or involves rights, remedies, or obligations which it does not have or involve, or that are prohibited by law;
- Knowingly making false or misleading statements of fact concerning the need for parts, replacement, or repair service;
- Misrepresenting the authority of a salesman, representative, or agent to negotiate the final terms of a consumer transaction;
- Basing a charge for the repair of any item in whole or in part on a guaranty or warranty instead of on the value of the actual repairs made or work to be performed on the item without stating separately the charges for the work as the charge for the warranty or guaranty, if any;
- Disconnecting, turning back, or resetting the odometer of any motor vehicle so as to reduce the number of miles indicated on the odometer gauge;
- Advertising any sale by fraudulently representing that a person is going out of business;
- Representing that work or services have been performed on, or parts replaced in, goods when the work or services were not performed or the parts replaced;
- The failure to disclose information concerning goods or services that was known at the time of the transaction if such failure to disclose such information was intended to induce the consumer into a transaction into which the consumer would not have entered had the information been disclosed.

In addition, the breach of an express or implied warranty is actionable under the DTPA. Warranties include:

- Express Warranty: this is an affirmation of fact or promise that the goods or services conform to a particular description. It does not include statements purporting to be mere opinions of the seller. The express warranty is sometimes in writing, but it can also be a verbal statement.

- Implied Warranty of Merchantability: this warranty guarantees that goods shall be merchantable, meaning they would pass without objection in the trade, are fit for the ordinary purpose for which the goods are used, and they conform to the promises of fact made on the label or container.
- Implied Warranty of Fitness for Purpose: this warranty is created when a buyer informs the seller that he/she wishes to buy a good for a special purpose and the buyer then relies on the seller's skills or judgment in selecting the good.
- Implied Warranty of Good and Workmanlike Manner: for work performed by one who has the knowledge, training, or experience necessary for the successful practice of a trade or occupation, this warranty requires that the person perform the work in a manner generally considered proficient by those capable of judging such work.
- Implied Warranty of Suitability: this warranty is mostly used for commercial leases. It requires that a leased property be free from latent physical or structural defects or inadequate or defective air conditioning, electric, or other building services. (Note, for residential leases, see Texas Property Code Section 92.056.)

Finally, the DTPA also protects against any act that would be considered unconscionable. Bear in mind that "unconscionability" is a difficult standard to meet. It is defined as an act or practice which, to a consumer's detriment, takes advantage of the lack of knowledge, ability, experience, or capacity of a person to a grossly unfair degree. Unconscionability sometimes arises when a seller that is savvy in a certain area manipulates an unsophisticated buyer into purchasing an item the buyer does not really want or need.

Who does the DTPA protect?

To be able to sue under the DTPA, you must be a "consumer." A "consumer" is defined as any individual, partnership, corporation, or governmental entity who seeks to acquire by purchase or lease any goods or services. Thus, not only are individuals protected under the DTPA, but partnerships and corporations as well. The only exception involves business consumers with more than $25 million in assets; they cannot sue under the DTPA. In addition, unless you purchased or leased or sought to purchase or lease an item, you are not a consumer. Thus, if you receive something for free and someone represents something regarding that free item, those representations are not actionable even if they are misleading or not true. For example, if the local appliance store called you and told you that you had just won a new 4-cycle washing machine, and it turns out that it only has 3 cycles, you could not sue under the DTPA because it was a gift. But, if you did something to obtain the chance of winning an item, such as sit through a pitch for a timeshare, then you could sue under the DTPA.

The DTPA is quite broad. It may not surprise you to know that you may sue partnerships and corporations that are in the business of selling goods or services, but under the Act, you may also sue individuals who are involved in business of any kind. You may sue anyone who makes a false, misleading or deceptive statement. So, even sales transactions between friends that involve representations that items are “in perfect condition” could expose the selling friend to liability under the DTPA—and maybe even treble damages! Keep in mind you are responsible for whatever you say. There is, however, a situation where your silence may cause you to violate the DTPA. Under the DTPA, it is a violation to not reveal known defects if the reason for failing to disclose was to lure the consumer into the transaction, and the consumer never would have entered the deal had she known the hidden facts. For example, assume the seller is selling his washing machine and he fails to tell the buyer that the spin cycle does not work. This omission would be a violation of the DTPA. Obviously, the buyer would not have bought the washing machine if she knew that it would not function properly. In this situation, silence can result in a violation of the Act. The DTPA is as user-friendly as it is consumer-protective.

You do not necessarily need a lawyer to use the Deceptive Trade Practices Act. If your damages are less than $10,000.00, you may represent yourself in justice court. However, if the damages you claim (up to three times your economic damages and court costs plus attorney’s fees) are greater than $10,000.00, the suit will go to district or county court, where a lawyer’s expertise will probably be needed.

However, when you are ready to file a lawsuit, you cannot go straight to court and file your claim. The DTPA requires that you give written notice of your problem to the merchant or seller at least sixty days before you can file suit in court. Basically, this entails writing the seller specifying the situation and how you were damaged. Many times, once sellers are reminded that ultimately they may be liable for three times economic damages, court costs, and attorney’s fees for their misrepresentations, they will move very quickly to resolve the complaint. Thus, the written notice gives the consumer and the seller a chance to resolve the dispute without expensive and time-consuming litigation. Furthermore, be sure to send this written notice of claim by certified mail, return receipt requested. By sending it in this manner, you will have proof that you sent it and exactly who received it.

The written notice letter should include: the factual background regarding the transaction; what you think the merchant or seller did or said that gives rise to a claim under the Act; the specific nature and details of your claim, including the amount of economic damages sought, mental anguish (if applicable) and attorney’s fees, if any; the fact that this letter serves as the prerequisite notice before filing suit; that if the claim is not resolved within this sixty-day period, you intend to pursue your claim in court; and if successful in court, you may be entitled to three times your damages.

Here is an example:

Mrs. Jane Ryan
123 Whiteoak Road
Hometown, TX 77777
October 14, 2013

Dear Mr. Sam Seller:

Last Thursday, October 10, 2013, I bought a “brand new” washing machine from your appliance store. You specifically told me that not only was it brand new, but that it came equipped with 4 cycles and 4 different temperature settings. I paid $289.00 for this washing machine. When I used the machine you sold me for the first time, however, I found scratches and dents on the inside tub. In addition, the machine had only 2 cycles, the spin cycle did not work, and it had only three different temperature settings.

I feel that the representations you made to me while I was in your store were false, deceptive and misleading under the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act. Because the machine does not conform to the representations you made, I wish to return the machine for a full refund. Under the Act, I am required to give you a sixty-day notice of my complaint prior to the filing of any suit. This letter should be considered that notice. If we are not able to come to a mutually agreeable settlement with regard to the washing machine, I will proceed by filing suit in the appropriate court. I would also like to inform you that if I am successful in court, I may be entitled to three times my damages, my court costs, and the entirety of my attorney’s fees.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this matter. I look forward to hearing from you soon at my home phone number (XXX-XXX-XXXX) to discuss resolving this troubling situation.

Sincerely,
Jane Ryan

The DTPA is a useful tool for consumers to level the playing field against merchants. Remember: false, misleading and deceptive business practices are actionable under the Act. But always keep in mind that any time you sell anything, you are also subject to the Act. Although the Act can be a very useful tool against an overbearing merchant, one must be careful and remember that it applies equally to all.

PURCHASING AN AUTOMOBILE

I bought a car on Saturday evening but changed my mind after I read some of the papers on Sunday morning. Do I have an absolute right to cancel the contract within 72 hours?

No. A 72-hour cancellation notice applies to certain home solicitation transactions, telephone solicitation transactions, and home improvement contracts. It does not apply to automobile purchases. However, if you discover problems with the vehicle after the purchase, which significantly impair its value, you may be able to use a different remedy. The problem must be concealed or difficult to discover and significant enough that you would not have purchased the vehicle if you had known about the problem. If you think this circumstance applies to you, you should immediately contact an attorney for assistance.

I have had credit problems in the past. When I purchased my most recent car the “finance person” at the dealership told me that I had to buy credit insurance. Do I have to do this? Also, the salesman told me that he needed to adjust the sales price of the car I was buying and the trade-in value of my car so that it would appear as if I had a greater equity or down payment. Is this proper?

No. The law states that you can be required to buy credit insurance only if it is disclosed to you on the Retail Installment Contract. As to the trade-in value, that is a problem that may violate some consumer credit laws. Remember, honesty is the best policy and the car dealer will “fudge” the numbers only if the dealer profits. For either of these problems, you should contact an attorney.

I have had repeated problems with my new vehicle. Despite several attempts, the dealer doesn't seem to be able to correct the problem. What can I do?

Like many other states, Texas has a Lemon Law. It is administered by the Texas Department of Motor Vehicles, 4000 Jackson Ave., Austin, Texas 78731; phone 888-368-4689. You can get a pamphlet with Lemon Law information and a complaint form by writing to the DMV at the above address. Information, including an online complaint form, is also available at the Department of Motor Vehicles website, txdmv.gov/motorists/consumer-protection/lemon-law.

What types of problems are covered by the Lemon Law?

Vehicles that are still covered by the manufacturer's warranty and have less than 24,000 miles are covered by the Lemon Law (there are some exceptions if the mileage is only slightly above 24,000 miles and the problem first occurred before 24,000 miles). If you buy a used car that meets this criteria, it is covered. Other used car purchases are generally NOT covered by the Lemon Law proceeding, but other remedies may be available. The Lemon Law divides problems into two categories: (1) safety issues and (2) non-safety issues. These problems can vary. A defective seat spring that pokes through the seat upholstery is probably a non-safety defect in the rear or passenger seat. However, a defective seat spring in the driver's seat that distracts the driver while operating the vehicle may be a safety defect. There is also a cumulative problem provision that involves 30 days out of service without a loaner car.

Why is it important to distinguish between safety and non-safety defects?

Two repair call visits within certain dates and mileage restrictions of a safety-related nature entitle you to remedies under the Lemon Law. If the problem is a non-safety problem, it takes four visits to entitle you to those remedies. Moreover, a non-safety problem must “substantially” impair the market value of the vehicle to be actionable under the Lemon Law.

What remedies am I entitled to under the Lemon Law?

The Lemon Law is generally a warranty enforcement provision. The manufacturer may have to buy back the vehicle, replace it with a similar vehicle, or order that it be capably repaired. However, the Texas Department of Motor Vehicles rarely awards monetary damages and cannot award attorney’s fees.

What if I don’t like the decision of the Texas Department of Motor Vehicles?

The decision is binding on the automobile manufacturer, but not on you. If you don’t like the decision, you can hire a lawyer and file a lawsuit. However, the automobile manufacturer is allowed to tell the judge or jury about the Lemon Law commission finding. You must first try to have the Texas Department of Motor Vehicles correct the problem before you bring a lawsuit.

I have experienced numerous mechanical problems with my used car. Can the Lemon Law help me?

No. The Lemon Law only applies to the purchase of new vehicles. However, if you bought a used vehicle that is still subject to the manufacturer’s warranty, carefully review the manufacturer’s warranty and contact the manufacturer. The manufacturer will often intervene and assist you if you are having warranty difficulties. If you have a manufacturer’s warranty, it can be honored at any authorized dealer. You do not have to return the vehicle to the selling dealer for manufacturer warranty work.

Whether the Lemon Laws apply to your vehicle depend upon whether the vehicle still has a warranty. Generally, these warranties expire after the earlier a few years or about 30,000 miles. Your warranty may be different. It is important that you read the warranty and ask about any terms you do not understand. If your vehicle has a valid warranty, then you should try to have the defects corrected under the terms of that warranty. If after a reasonable number of attempted repairs under the warranty, the vehicle still has a substantial safety issue or a defect that substantially affects its market value, then the Lemon Law may apply. Talk to the dealer or the person who gave the warranty, or an attorney if you think this situation applies to you.

I bought a used car with an extended service contract. The service contract company will not help and the dealer tells me he sold the vehicle to me “As Is.” What can I do?

If you purchased the extended service contract at the same time that you purchased the vehicle or within 90 days thereafter from the selling dealer, the dealer cannot disclaim any warranties under that extended service contract. This means that you did not buy the car “As Is” even if you signed papers that said so. The service contract is the warranty and the dealer must honor the warranty. The “As Is” document violates the law and may entitle you to monetary damages. You should consult an attorney.

What if I'm having problems with my used car but I didn't buy a service contract and the car was sold "As Is?"

The "As Is" disclosure is strong medicine and there is probably not anything you can do unless you can prove that the dealer knew or should have known of the problem. You may be able to prove this through service records, talking with previous owners, or talking with mechanics or body shop professionals who state that the problem is obvious to a knowledgeable person.

I bought my car from an individual, not a dealer. Does the law treat them differently?

No. Almost all of the laws regarding the sale of vehicles are the same for individuals as for dealers.

I think the sales representative pressured me into buying credit life and disability insurance and an extended contract when I didn't really want one. What can I do?

The law requires that certain insurance policies have a period of time during which you may cancel coverage and received a refund. This period is usually only a few weeks. You can immediately write to the insurance company or service contract provider and cancel either the contract or the insurance. However, do this sooner rather than later because the refund is usually larger the earlier it is requested.

I purchased a car at a local new car dealership that arranged financing for me. They made me sign a temporary delivery agreement and said that it was just a formality. What is this document and what does it mean?

This document is the source of many bad transactions for consumers. Few buyers realize it, but a car dealer does not provide the funds for you to buy a vehicle. The money is provided by third-party lenders. Lenders consider your loan a transaction that is separate and independent from your purchase of the car. The dealer may actually offer to sell your Retail Installment Contract to several different lenders and will choose the lender that provides the most money for the dealer, not the best loan terms for the buyer. Potential lenders are not bound to you until they agree to buy the Retail Installment Contract. This is the reason that the dealer asks a buyer to sign a Temporary Delivery Agreement: You are driving the vehicle without completing the financing transaction.

Dealers argue that the Temporary Delivery Agreement is a convenience to the Buyer so that the Buyer can drive the vehicle home while waiting for credit approval. Consumer advocates assert that the real reason the dealer wants you to sign the document is because the Dealer is afraid you will find a better deal at another location and the Dealer will lose the sale. In any event, if there is an unexpected problem with the Buyer's credit or no lender is willing to buy the loan on the terms proposed by dealer, the dealer may ask the Buyer to return the vehicle or sign an amended Retail Installment Contract. The new contract will never be a better deal for the Buyer. You should immediately contact an attorney if you are asked to sign a second contract under these circumstances.

I bought a used car from a dealer a year ago. I have contacted him many times but I have not yet received the title or any record that the title has been applied for. What can I do?

This is a very serious problem that may indicate even bigger problems. The law requires the title to a used vehicle to be transferred immediately. This is particularly so if you pay cash for the vehicle. Never pay for the vehicle in full unless you receive the title at the same time or are at least given a chance to inspect the title. The potential problems are serious. The law allows a car dealer a reasonable amount of time to apply for a certificate of title. All fees collected from you should be paid by that time as well. Car dealers sometimes run into problems with a title. They could lose the original title, the person that sold the vehicle to the dealer may be late in delivering the title or even more sinister problems can occur. A delayed title can be an indication of:

- a) an odometer disclosure problem;
- b) a wrecked or reconditioned vehicle;
- c) a fraudulent title to a stolen vehicle; or
- d) financial problems of the dealer.

A licensed car dealer must post a bond with the State of Texas in the amount of $25,000.00. The bond is to compensate anyone who buys a car from the dealer but does not receive a title or anyone who sells a car to the dealer but does not receive payment. However, the $25,000.00 bond is often insufficient to cover more than a couple of transactions. Act quickly because recovery on the bond is “first come, first served.”

I took my car to a repair facility last month. The repair facility performed work that I did not authorize and charged more than they said they would. I argued with them about these problems but ended up writing a check so I could get my car. On the way home I realized that they did not fix the problem. I was so mad I stopped payment on my check. What can they do?

If you stopped payment on the check, the repair facility can repossess your car if they provided notice to you of the right of repossession. This notice must be provided to you before they attempt to cash the check. You should immediately express your complaint in writing and probably should consult an attorney. If you cannot afford to have your car repossessed, you should pay the check.

Based upon your advice above I paid the check to the repair facility, but I'm still steamed. What can I do?

The law states that a worker such as a mechanic provides an implied warranty of “good and workmanlike” service. It cannot be disclaimed and does not need to be provided in writing; however, the express terms of the contract may supersede this implied warranty if the contract specifically describes the manner, performance, or quality of the services to be performed. The difficulty of your position is that you must prove that the mechanic did not properly perform the repairs. The most practical way to do this is to immediately take the car to another repair shop. Have them inspect the car and provide a written report of work that needs to be done and the cost to perform the work. Ask them if the work performed by the previous repair facility was performed properly, if at all. Ask them to write their brief opinion on the repair order. Keep any parts that are involved. You can then complain in writing on your own or hire an attorney.

Can a mechanic repossess your car if you fail to pay for repairs?

Yes, if you sign a repair contract that provides for repossession in a “conspicuous” manner, a mechanic is not required to return your car to you until you pay for the repairs. If you pay the repairs with a check that is dishonored, or if payment on the check is stopped, the mechanic is entitled to repossess your car. A major limitation on the mechanic’s repossession remedy is that the mechanic may not “breach the peace.”

Many of these remedies sound like something I can do for myself. When should I consult an attorney?

You should consider contacting an attorney after you have attempted to resolve the problem yourself and were unable to do so. Hopefully, your efforts to resolve the problem were made in writing. If not, do so immediately or at least record your memory of the conversations on paper. Most disputes can be resolved either on your own or with minimal effort of an attorney. However, these are some warning signs that probably require the assistance of an attorney:

- You learn that the vehicle had suffered serious damage in a prior collision, but this was not told to you at the time you purchased the car;
- You have not received the title or the non-negotiable certificate of title (pink slip) within forty-five days after the sale;
- An authorized dealer refuses to honor the factory warranty because of a defect in the car prior to your ownership;
- The vehicle's odometer has been altered;
- You have been asked to sign a revised Retail Installment Contract and other purchase documents under less favorable terms than your original transaction
- Your vehicle has been repossessed even though you have made all of your payments to the lender (except for mechanic's lien repossessions).

If you are considering purchasing a new or used vehicle, take the following check list with you and get answers from your dealer. These questions will help you obtain important information about the vehicle, including warranties, service and financing.

CAR BUYER CHECK LIST

I, the person completing this check list, _____, declare that the following information to be true and correct as to the Vehicle described below.

Printed Name _____

Signature _____

Buyer _____ Seller _____
Dealer _____
Make _____ Model _____
Year _____ Odometer _____
VIN _____ Stock Number _____

1. VEHICLE TITLE.

___ NEW. The Buyer is the first retail buyer of this Vehicle.

___ DEMONSTRATOR. This Vehicle has been used only by an employee as a personal vehicle or for a test drive by a prospective buyer. It has fewer than 6,000 miles on the odometer.

___ USED. This is a used vehicle with an odometer reading of _____ miles. Unless marked below the Vehicle has not been salvaged or reconditioned and the Vehicle's title is a Blue Texas title.

___ OUT OF STATE TITLE. This Vehicle currently has a title from _____.

___ DUPLICATE TITLE. The original title was lost or stolen and a new title was issued.

___ SALVAGED. This Vehicle has been damaged and sold for salvage.

___ FLOOD DAMAGE. This Vehicle has been flood damaged.

___ RECONDITIONED. This vehicle has been salvaged and rebuilt.

2. PRIOR OWNERSHIP.

The Seller acquired the Vehicle from:

the Manufacturer

a Non Dealer

another Dealer

as a Trade-in

from a Dealer Only Auction

This is a PROGRAM CAR. This means that the Vehicle was probably used in a Rental Car or Business Vehicle fleet.

We acquired the Vehicle on _____ (date) from _____ (name of Seller). The last registered owner of this Vehicle was _____ and the reported mileage on _____ (date) was _____ miles.

3. VEHICLE CONDITION.

The Seller has NOT inspected the vehicle.

The Seller does NOT know the vehicle's full ownership history.

The Vehicle has not been damaged in a collision.

The Vehicle has been in a collision. Attached Not attached is a summary

The damage was minor and will not affect the coverage of any manufacturer's warranty or any extended service contract which Seller will sell to Buyer.

The damage will affect the coverage of any manufacturer's warrant or any extended service contract which Seller will sell to Buyer in the following ways: (provide written summary).

Seller has access to insurance industry information on the insurance claims that have been paid on this vehicle. Attached Not attached is a summary

Seller does not have access to insurance industry information on the insurance claims that have been paid on this vehicle.

No manufacturer warranty or extended service contract is available because the prior collision voids any warranty or renders the Vehicle ineligible for any extended service contract.

The Buyer asked the following questions, which Seller refused to answer: [fill in questions here.

BUYER SHOULD HAVE THE VEHICLE CHECKED BY THEIR OWN MECHANIC BEFORE THEY MAKE A PURCHASE DECISION.

4. SERVICE HISTORY.

This vehicle has been properly serviced according to the manufacturer's suggested maintenance procedures.

There are no service records from the prior owner but Seller inspected the vehicle and found no lack of maintenance which would adversely affect the manufacturer's warranty or any extended service contract which Seller will sell to Buyer.

Seller has no record of the service history, has not inspected the vehicle, and does not know whether the vehicle is eligible for any remaining manufacturer's warranty or an extended service contract.

Buyer may take the Vehicle to a mechanic of their choice for an inspection.

Seller refused to allow Buyer to take the Vehicle to a mechanic of Buyer's choice for an inspection.

5. FINANCING.

___ Buyer is paying cash or has arranged their own financing.

___ Seller has arranged financing for Buyer for the purchase of the Vehicle. A copy of the financing agreement and any related documents are attached.

___ Buyer's financing application has not been approved by Seller. Seller will not provide financing for Buyer.

6. CREDIT INSURANCE.

___ No credit insurance is sold in this transaction.

___ Credit Insurance must be purchased to obtain financing.

___ Buyer agreed to purchase Credit Insurance after Seller explained through its licensed insurance agent, _____, the cost and benefit of Credit Insurance to Buyer. It was explained that the Credit Insurance that Seller offers is expensive and that it probably duplicates life or disability insurance that Buyer already has or that is provided by Buyer's employer. It was also explained that if Buyer has ANY health problem it will likely disqualify Buyer from coverage and the insurance company will refund Buyer's premium and refuse to pay the claim, leaving Buyer with no coverage and a loss of the interest Buyer paid on the loan for the Credit Insurance. It was also explained that there ___ is/___ is not a waiting period of ___ days before Buyer is eligible for benefits and that a written claim verified by a medical professional will be necessary to obtain the benefits.

7. EXTENDED SERVICE CONTRACT\WARRANTY.

___ Buyer did not buy a service contract.

___ No service contract is available with the purchase of the Vehicle.

___ The manufacturer's warranty will continue until the earlier of _____ miles or _____ (date).

___ Buyer purchased an extended service contract from Seller, coverage of which will begin only after the manufacturer's warranty expires. Buyer must perform regular maintenance such as oil changes and provide the receipts to obtain reimbursement for most repairs. Buyer must obtain pre-approval to obtain reimbursement on most repairs. A copy of the extended service contract is attached.

___ Seller required Buyer to buy an extended service contract to obtain financing from the Seller.

8. ARBITRATION.

___ The sale of this Vehicle is not subject to an arbitration agreement.

___ The sale of this Vehicle is subject to an optional arbitration agreement. The Buyer ___ agreed ___ did not agree to the optional arbitration agreement. If Buyer agreed to the optional arbitration agreement, it is attached.

___ The sale of the Vehicle is subject to a mandatory arbitration agreement. Buyer must sign the agreement or Seller will not sell the Vehicle to Buyer. A copy of the arbitration agreement is attached.

9. ADVERTISED/STICKER PRICE.

___ This is a new Vehicle and the window sticker price is $_____. The original window sticker is affixed to the window.

___ The window sticker has been removed from the car but a copy has been provided to Buyer and is attached.

The Vehicle has not been advertised in any electronic or print media in the last 30 days.
 The Vehicle has been advertised within the last 30 days at a price of $_____
 A new vehicle identical to the Vehicle has been advertised in the last 30 days at a price of $_____.

10. DEALER ACCESSORIES AND SERVICES.

Seller's Vehicle Purchase Order ___ does ___ does not contain a preprinted entry for the purchase of Customer Services, NADW, Road Services or similar products.

The purchase of the following services or products are required by the Seller. Seller will not sell the Vehicle to Buyer if you do not agree to purchase the following services or products. The services or products have been explained to Buyer. The services and products are:

A brochure and/or materials describing the service have been provided to Buyer.

11. REBATES/SPECIAL FINANCE RATES.

There are no rebates or special finance rates offered with the sale of the Vehicle.

A rebate of $_____ is offered with the purchase of the Vehicle.

A finance rate of ___% APR is offered with the purchase of the Vehicle on financing up to ___ months. Buyer's credit application must be approved to receive this special rate.

Buyer did not accept either the rebate or the finance rate.

Buyer accepted: the ___ rebate ___ finance rate ___ both.

12. TRADE-IN.

There is no trade in.

Buyer has agreed to trade to Seller the following as a part of Buyer's purchase of the Vehicle.

Make _____ Model _____
 Year _____ Odometer _____
 VIN _____

Buyer owes _____ (creditor) $_____ on the vehicle being traded in., which is valued at $_____ in the _____ (month, year) NADA guide to used vehicles.

Seller has agreed to pay Buyer $_____ for the vehicle being traded in. This payment was ___ paid directly to Buyer ___ subtracted from the Vehicle's purchase price.

Buyer has $_____ in negative equity for the vehicle being traded in. This means that Buyer owes more money than it is worth. This negative equity will be added to the purchase price of the Vehicle.

13. TRANSACTION SUMMARY.

Vehicle Price:	$ _____
Dealer Add-Ons:	$ _____
Total Vehicle Price:	$ _____
Trade-In Value:	$ _____
Less Negative Equity:	$ _____
Net Trade-In:	$ _____
Down Payment:	$ _____
Rebate:	$ _____
Less Total Paid:	$ _____
Net Vehicle Price:	$ _____

Sales Tax:
 $ _____
 Title and License Fee:
 $ _____
 Credit Insurance:
 $ _____
 Extended Service Contract:
 $ _____
 Total Amount Due or Financed:
 $ _____

Amount Financed:
 $ _____ Apr ____%

Finance Charge:
 $ _____

Payment Per Month:
 $ _____

Total Paid if All Payments are Made:
 $ _____

Number of Payments: ____ Due Date ____ of Each Month

First Payment Date: _____

Final Payment Date: _____

REPOSESSION

What is repossession?

Repossession is the right of a seller, bank, or finance company (“creditor”) to take back possession of an item after a buyer fails to pay timely an obligation for the item. The creditor can only repossess an item secured by a loan. Review your loan documents to determine which items, if any, are secured under the loan agreement. In Texas, the creditor can take possession of your item through the courts, or the creditor can also take possession on its own, without the courts.

Can a creditor repossess without seeking court approval?

Yes. When a consumer fails to pay an installment payment, or several of them, as required by a security agreement, the creditor has the right to take possession of the collateral without resort to judicial process if this can be done without “breach of the peace.” This is commonly referred to as “self-help repossession,” and in Texas, a creditor can take possession even if you are only a few days late on your payment.

Can the item be taken without my permission?

Maybe. If the item is an automobile or boat, for example, the creditor’s repossession agent can simply show up to where the item is parked or stored and take it at any time, provided, however, that the repossession agent does not breach the peace while doing so.

What does “breach of the peace” mean?

A “breach of the peace” is synonymous with disorderly conduct, and a repossession agent cannot breach the peace while repossessing the item. Texas courts have found the following actions occurring during an attempt to repossess property as a “breach of the peace”: physically taking a set of car keys from the debtor; fighting with the debtor; breaking and entering into the debtor’s garage; gaining entry to a building by picking a lock; and causing unreasonable damage to property. For example, if you are physically sitting in the automobile, the repossession agent cannot legally repossess it. But the repossession agent can come back later, for example, so long as he/she does not disturb the peace. It is not a “breach of the peace” for a repossession agent to repossess a car from in front of a debtor’s home, even in the middle of the night.

What happens if a creditor “breaches the peace” while repossessing an item?

Self-help repossession is valid only if it is accomplished without breach of the peace. Thus, if a debtor can establish that the creditor “breached the peace,” the debtor may be able to invalidate the repossession. If a repossession has been wrongful, the debtor may have a tort claim against the creditor and may be able to seek damages.

For example, assume you are three months late on your car payments. The car dealer has the right to repossess your car so long as this can be done without “breach of the peace.” One day, the car dealer comes to your house and sees the car locked inside the garage. Wanting the car, the dealer breaks the windows to the garage and picks the lock so he can gain access to the car. He then drives the car away. Because the car dealer has “breached the peace,” this repossession effort would be declared invalid and you might be able to bring a lawsuit against the dealer for his actions.

Does a creditor have to give the debtor notice before repossession?

No. Notice to the consumer of the creditor’s intent to repossess the collateral is not required. There are two notices required under state law. First, the creditors must provide notice to the debtor after the vehicle has been repossessed, giving the debtor no less than 10 days to purchase the vehicle. The notice must also provide the debtor with the date and location of the sale of the vehicle, whether by private sale or public auction if the vehicle is sold, the creditor must provide the debtor with a post-disposition accounting. This means that, if the creditor repossesses and then sells your car, the creditor must provide to you details of the sale, including the sale price so that you can determine if the price was commercially reasonable. There are substantial remedies available to the consumer if the creditor fails to provide these proper notices.

Can a debtor get the property back after it has been repossessed?

Yes, but it will be more expensive than if you had paid the loan amount. If a creditor accomplishes the repossession of the collateral, the debtor may redeem it by tendering the entire balance due, plus repossession charges, attorney’s fees, and other foreclosure costs. Needless to say, this can be quite costly. Such redemption must occur before the creditor has disposed of the collateral or entered into a contract for its disposition or taken steps to retain the collateral in satisfaction of the debt.

Does a debtor still owe for an item after it has been repossessed?

Yes, even after the creditor repossesses the item, you may still owe the creditor money. This may occur if you owe more on the item than the creditor sells it for. Consider the following hypothetical: You purchase a car for $10,000 and make 10 payments, which reduces the balance owed to $9000. But then you miss one payment and the creditor repossesses the car and sells it at auction for a reasonable price of $8000. You would still owe $1000 to the creditor, plus repossession charges, attorney's fees, and other foreclosure costs. This is called a deficiency, and you are liable to pay it. Persons at risk of repossession may want to consider satisfying the debt of the item prior to the creditor repossessing the item, even if that requires selling the item because the debtor may be able to get more value from the sale than the creditor, and the debtor would not have to pay the repossession costs.

What does a creditor have to do after repossessing property?

The law provides that the creditor, after repossessing the debtor's goods, is required to: (1) take reasonable steps to notify the debtor and other interested parties of the sale of the goods; and (2) ensure that every aspect of the sale be in a commercially reasonable manner. A commercially reasonable manner is a manner of sale which in method, time, place, terms, and advertising are calculated to obtain a fair price for the goods. In other words, the creditor cannot repossess your item, sell it to the creditor's cousin for a price far below market value, and then demand that you pay the difference. The creditor is required to follow certain rules to ensure the sale is reasonable.

What happens if a creditor does not act in a commercially reasonable manner?

If a creditor does not act in a commercially reasonable manner, the creditor is not entitled to recover a deficiency judgment against the debtor. Instead, the creditor is only entitled to the proceeds from the sale of the collateral, which are usually less than the amount owed by the debtor.

What does repossession do to my credit report?

It is one of the most damaging things that can be reported on your credit. It does not matter whether it is voluntary or involuntary. It will have a negative effect for a long time. In most cases, a debtor would be better off selling the item to pay the debt, rather than going through repossession.

What happens if I am contacted by a law enforcement officer to perform the repossession?

You should always obey a law enforcement officer who is in uniform, wearing a badge, and delivering official court documents. If so, the officer will clearly identify himself, his purpose and deliver an official copy of the court papers to you. However, some repossession companies use names that sound like law enforcement agencies, threaten arrests or criminal prosecutions, or use titles that sound official (like investigator.) These actions may rise to the level of impersonation of a law enforcement officer, which is a breach of the peace.

CREDIT CARD/DEBIT CARD LIABILITY

What is a credit card?

As a practical matter, a credit card is an identification card, plate, coupon, book, number, or any other device authorizing a designated person or bearer to obtain property or services on credit. Credit card transactions involve a convenient means of paying bills and the granting of a revolving line of credit to the cardholder. This revolving line of credit usually comes with a grace period of up to 25 days to pay the card issuer at least the minimum monthly balance.

What is a secured credit card?

Most credit card obligations are unsecured; that is, no property or funds are pledged for repayment of the credit card debt. However, some credit card issuers have programs where the credit card obligation is secured by a deposit account (bank account). The target population for secured cards has historically been people who would be rejected for unsecured cards because of a prior bankruptcy or minimal credit history. Risk to the credit card issuer is reduced because the debt is fully secured by a deposit account.

What is a debit card?

A debit card is defined as an identification card, plate, coupon, book, number, or any other device authorizing a designated person or bearer to communicate a request to an unmanned teller machine or a customer convenience terminal. As a practical matter, a debit card more closely resembles a check than a credit card; i.e., payment to the merchant is virtually simultaneous with the sales transaction. (Note that credit cards typically offer a grace period [see “What is a credit card?,” above].) A debit card provides for point of sale transfers from a cardholder’s bank account to the merchant’s bank account.

What is a charge card?

A charge card has many of the same features and resembles a credit card in many ways. Charges can be made on one day and paid at a later date (usually within 25 days). However, unlike a credit card, a charge card must be paid in full on the due date—the cardholder cannot maintain an outstanding or running balance like a credit card.

What disclosures must be made in solicitations for credit cards?

In direct mail applications and solicitations, disclosures must be given to the consumer of six key elements of information: (1) the APR or interest rates that will apply to the card, including a variable rate disclosure; (2) any annual fee; (3) any minimum finance charges; (4) any transaction fees charged for purchases; (5) grace periods (or the absence of them) for purchase transactions; and (6) the balance calculation method for purchases (not applicable for cash advances). Each of these key terms must be presented in a table placed conspicuously in the application or solicitation or on the accompanying materials.

In addition, the direct mail application materials must disclose any cash advance fees, late fees, or overline fees. At least 30 days before the scheduled renewal date of the cardholder’s account, the credit card issuer must make additional disclosures if the renewal carries with it the imposition of an annual fee. These disclosures include (1) the date by which the account will expire if not renewed; (2) the six key terms that will apply if the account is renewed (but not ancillary fees such as late charges); and (3) the method the cardholder may use to terminate continued credit availability under the account.

What is a cardholder agreement?

The Cardholder Agreement governs the relationship between the credit card issuer and cardholder. The Agreement contains all the legal and factual terms and conditions under which a cardholder or authorized user “charges” his or her account, as well as the guidelines by which the credit card issuer makes the extension of credit to the consumer. Consumers should retain copies of their Cardholder Agreements for future reference. In the event of a question or dispute regarding a purchase or extension of credit, this document usually explains the procedure and remedy to resolve a problem.

What initial disclosures are made?

In general, after the contract has been entered into by cardholder and credit card issuer, the initial disclosures include the following:

- The conditions under which a finance charge may be imposed, including any free-ride period and the fact that no such free ride is provided if that is the fact.
- The method of determining the balance upon which a finance charge will be imposed.
- The method of determining the amount of finance charge.
- Where one or more periodic rates may be used to compute the finance charge, each such rate, the range of balances, and the corresponding nominal annual percentage rate (APR).
- Identification of other charges that may be imposed as part of the plan and their methods of computation.
- A description of any security interest.
- The minimum periodic payment required.
- A statement of the protection provided to the cardholder for billing error disputes and the prohibition of adverse credit reporting while a billing dispute is going on, as well as the right of the cardholder to raise claims and defenses against the issuer under certain conditions.

What are cash advances?

Credit cards, charge cards, and debit cards usually have a “cash advance” feature through which the cardholder can obtain immediate cash, with a concomitant charge (plus fees as described below) to this card.

A. Credit Card - Cash advances taken on a credit card are typically accompanied by both a transaction fee and an interest carry. Interest is charged from the cash advance until the date paid pursuant to the terms of the Cardholder Agreement.

B. Charge Cards - Cash advances to charge cards are similar to credit cards (i.e., a transaction fee is assessed and interest is charged until paid). However, charge cards typically must be paid in full as set out in the monthly statement.

C. Debit Card - A debit card more closely resembles a check; a cash advance to a debit card is actually an immediate point of purchase withdrawal from the customer’s checking or savings account. Accordingly, an interest carry charge is not typically assessed, and transaction fees are infrequently levied.

What if something was charged in error to my credit card?

In 1975, the Federal Fair Credit Billing Act (FCBA) became law. In a nutshell, the FCBA provides as follows:

1. Open-end truth-in-lending disclosures (e.g., for Mastercard or Visa customers) were enlarged to include a statement, in a form prescribed by the FCBA, of the cardholder’s right to billing error corrections, as well as the issuer’s duty to acknowledge and investigate alleged errors. Such disclosures must be made when the credit card account is opened and periodically thereafter.

2. The first step in the process is for the cardholder to send to the issuer a written inquiry within 60 days after transmission of the bill, including his name and account number and the nature of his billing complaint. The cardholder may use his monthly billing statement stub to register his complaint unless the bank has required a separate statement. The term “billing error” means items on a periodic statement that reflect (1) credit extensions not made, or made in a different amount; (2) credit extensions for which documentation or clarification is requested; (3) undelivered or unaccepted goods or services; (4) incorrect payments or credits; (5) clerical or computational mistakes; and (6) other errors designated by the FCBA.

3. The second step is for the issuer who receives a proper written claim to make a written acknowledgment or a written response within 30 days of the cardholder’s inquiry. If mere acknowledgment is the issuer’s first response, this must be followed by a full response within two billing cycles (but not more than 90 days) after the complaint was originally received.

4. If the issuer determines upon investigation that a billing error has been made, it must make appropriate corrections—including credit for any associated finance charges—and so advise the cardholder in its response. If an investigation does not reveal any error, its response must explain this conclusion to the cardholder, including reasons why the issuer believes the account to be correct. Upon request, the issuer must provide copies of documentation of the cardholder’s debt.

5. Until the issuer investigates and responds one way or the other to a claim of error, it may not (1) restrict or close the credit card account as retribution for the claim of error or (2) send an adverse report of the item to any credit bureau. On the other hand, the issuer may collect any amount not in dispute and may report the disputed item to the credit bureau following investigation, a written response, and an additional 10-day grace period for the cardholder to make payment. If the item is reported to the credit bureau, however, the issuer must indicate that the matter is in dispute and notify the cardholder of its action.

6. If the issuer fails to make a proper response to a claim of billing error, it is forbidden to collect the disputed amount and any finance charges, with the forfeiture limited to $50. This penalty is independent of any Truth-in-Lending civil penalty for failure to disclose a cardholder’s fair credit billing rights.

What is the limit of my liability if my credit card is lost or stolen?

A cardholder is liable for unauthorized use of his credit card only if (1) he has accepted it; (2) the liability does not exceed $50; (3) the card issuer gives adequate notice of the potential liability; (4) the issuer provides the cardholder with a description of a means by which the issuer may be notified of loss or theft of the card; (5) the unauthorized use occurs before the cardholder has notified the issuer of the loss or theft; and (6) the issuer has provided a method (such as a signature line or photograph) whereby the cardholder can be identified as the person authorized to use the card.

The liability of the issuer is made even clearer insofar as the burden is on the issuer to show that the conditions have been met that give rise to the $50 liability per card. Liability limitations for the holder do not apply when the cardholder voluntarily and knowingly allows another to use his card and that person goes on a frolic of his own. Unauthorized use occurs only where there is no actual, implied, or apparent authority for such use by the cardholder. If such authority exists, the cardholder will be held responsible for any purchases made through use of the card.

In summary, a credit card holder may refuse to pay off his card balance if he is in a dispute with a local merchant involving more than $50 and has made a good faith attempt to get satisfaction from the merchant. The issuing bank in such a case may not exercise its common-law right of set-off against the customer’s account to force payment of the disputed amount.

What is the 100-mile rule?

The 100-mile rule helps limit the liability of the card issuer for fraudulent use of a credit card. The card issuer is not liable for unauthorized purchases outside a 100-mile radius of the mailing address provided by the cardholder. In these instances, given timely and correct notice, the risk of loss passes to the merchant who participated in the transaction.

What information am I entitled to if I am denied credit?

If you are denied credit by a store or other business that regularly transacts business with its customers on credit, the Fair Credit Reporting Act requires that business give you notice of the reason for the denial of credit. Also, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act states that you may not be denied credit or given different credit conditions on the basis of gender, marital status, race, religion, national origin, age, or because you receive public assistance.

What is the effect of a credit bureau's failure to prevent the same error from recurring in the consumer's file?

As many as 50 million consumers have inaccurate credit records. Reporting agencies' failure to take appropriate steps to permanently correct errors can result in a consumer's recovery for actual and punitive damages and attorney fees.

Are there any protections against harassment by a creditor?

Yes, the Texas Debt Collection Act and the Federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act limit the times and manner in which a creditor, or the creditor's representative such as a collection agency, can contact you regarding payment of your debt. For example, under the FDCPA, the creditor generally may not contact you before 8:00 a.m. and after 9:00 p.m. Also, once you request in writing that a creditor not contact you at your home or your employment, the creditor may only contact you one more time to inform you of what further action it plans to take. Your request should be mailed by certified mail, and be sure to keep a copy of your letter.

Debt collectors must treat consumers with courtesy and respect according to federal and state collection acts. If a debt collector attempts to collect a debt in the following ways, your rights may have been violated:

- Contacting a third party (other than spouse, attorney, or credit bureau) about the debt
- Calling before 8:00 a.m. or after 9:00 p.m.
- Calling your place of employment if you've notified the collection agency not to call at work
- Engaging in harassing, oppressive or abusive conduct
- Threatening violence
- Using obscene or profane language
- Calling repeatedly with an intent to annoy
- Failing to identify itself as a debt collector
- Threatening that nonpayment will result in arrest/ imprisonment
- Threatening to take illegal action
- Falsely accusing the consumer of committing a crime
- Failing to send 30-day notice letter informing the consumer of his or her right to request validation of the debt
- Failing to state the consumer's right to dispute the debt within 30 days of receiving the notice letter
- Continuing collection activities before validating debt

These are only some ways that a debt collector may be violating your consumer rights. If you believe that a debt collector is violating your rights, you should keep track of collection calls.

How can I protect myself from Credit Card fraud?

Credit card fraud can occur in a variety of ways – from low-tech dumpster diving to high-tech computer hacking. Incorporating a few habits into your routine can help prevent you from becoming a victim. The following is a list of fraud protection practices recommended by the Federal Trade Commission:

1. Keep in a secure place a record of your account numbers, their expiration dates, and the phone numbers to reports fraud for each card issuer.
2. Don't lend your card to anyone – even your kids or roommates – and don't leave your cards, receipts, or bank statements around your home or office.
3. When you no longer need a card, a receipt, or a bank statement, shred it before throwing it away.
4. Don't give your account or credit card number to anyone on the phone unless you've made the call to a company you know to be reputable. If you haven't done business with a company before, do an online search for reviews or complaints before giving out your information.
5. Carry your card separately from your wallet. It can minimize your losses if someone steals your wallet or purse.
6. During a transaction, keep your eyes on your card. Make sure you get it back before you walk away.
7. Never sign a blank receipt. Draw a line through any blank spaces above the total line.
8. Save your receipts to compare with your statement.
9. Open your bills promptly – or check them often online – and reconcile them with the purchases you've made.
10. Report any questionable charges to the card issuer.
11. Notify your card issuer if your address changes or if you will be traveling.
12. Don't write your account number on the outside of an envelope.

DEBT COLLECTION

What is Debt Collection?

Debt collection is the process a creditor will engage in to seek repayment of money that the creditor believes it is owed. Typically, a creditor is a business to which a consumer owes money. Many businesses will refer their outstanding debts to collection agencies, whose job it is to contact the consumer and convince them to pay their debt, sometimes in an aggressive or annoying fashion. There is, however, some good news for consumers! Debt collection agencies are regulated in their behavior by a series of laws, both state and Federal, which are designed to prevent harassment of consumers by overzealous agencies.

What should I do if I'm contacted by a debt collection agency?

The first step is to remain calm. You don't have to worry about going to jail for owing someone money. Since you're fortunate enough to live in Texas, you don't even have to worry about having your wages garnished by a creditor to pay back the alleged debt. Texas' long history as a place where people could pick up and move to start a new life (think "Gone to Texas") has resulted in a fairly strong set of protections for those alleged to owe money based on a debt. A creditor (someone who claims you owe them money) can only seize some of your assets, and only after filing a Writ of Garnishment with a court. Your next step should be to get in touch with an attorney who specializes in debt collection defense, especially if you are getting a lot of calls from the collection agency or you're not sure why you are being contacted—an attorney can easily get a debt collection agency to stop contacting you with a simple letter. If you aren't sure that you even owe the debt in the first place, you can send a request for validation of debt letter by certified mail within 30 days of the debt notice. Remember to hold onto copies of all documents you send for your records.

What is the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau?

The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) is a relatively new Federal government agency designed to assist consumers in dealing with a variety of consumer-related legal issues. Since many areas of the law regarding consumer financial issues can be incredibly complex, the CFPB is intended to provide a resource for ordinary consumers to learn more about potential pitfalls they may face in dealing with the companies that provide these types of financial services, including banks and debt collection agencies, and the Federal laws in place regulating those companies. When a consumer has had difficult dealings with a financial services company, they can also make a complaint directly to the CFPB, which will forward your complaint to the company and attempt to gain a response within 15 days. You can learn more about the CFPB at <http://www.consumerfinance.gov/>

What laws are there in Texas to regulate debt collectors?

FDCPA

There are 2 main laws in effect in Texas that regulate debt collection. The first of these is the Federal Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA). The FDCPA protects consumers from abuses in the collection of debts. A consumer under the law is any natural person allegedly obligated to pay a debt incurred primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. The FDCPA only applies to third party debt collectors, and does not restrict companies who go after consumers to collect their own debts. It prevents debt collectors from communicating with a consumer at an unusual time or place, communicating directly with a consumer who is represented by an attorney, and communicating with a consumer while they are at work if it is known that the consumer's employer does not allow such communication. Debt collectors are also required to send the consumer written notice containing:

- The amount of the debt
- The creditor's identity
- A statement that the debt will be considered valid unless disputed within 30 days
- An offer to verify the debt if disputed by the consumer

This written notice must be sent within 5 days of initial communication with the consumer and must be prominently displayed.

If you believe your rights have been violated, you have 1 year from the date of the violation to bring suit under the FDCPA. Consult with an attorney to determine whether filing suit is appropriate in your circumstances.

TDCA

Another law Texas consumers can rely on is called the Texas Debt Collection Act (TDCA). The TDCA is more broad than the FDCPA, because it applies both to third part debt collectors and entities collecting their own debts. It protects consumers by preventing debt collectors and other entities collecting on behalf of their own debts from a variety of harassing behavior, including, but not limited to:

- Making threats of violence or other criminal acts
- Using obscene language
- Threatening arrest of the consumer
- Making repeated anonymous harassing phone calls
- Sending documents to a consumer that appear to be issued by a court or other official agency

If a debt collector contacts you and is in violation of any of these rules, be sure to get in touch with an attorney immediately. Violations of the TDCA are punishable by both civil and criminal penalties.

Texas consumer law can be a complicated landscape to navigate, but there are a variety of beneficial protections in place for consumers. Many violations of these laws can result in financial damage awards to the victim as a means of discouraging debt collectors from abusive practices. If you find yourself being contacted by debt collectors, remember to speak to an attorney to see if there's anything that can be done to help you obtain the result you're looking for.

You can also file a complaint with the office of the Texas Attorney General by going to <http://www.oag.state.tx.us/consumer/complain.html>.

JUDGMENT

What is a judgment?

A judgment is an official result of a lawsuit in court. In debt collection lawsuits, the judge may award the creditor or debt collector a judgment against you. If you do not respond to a legal complaint, within the time specified on the service documents you are served with, you could lose your chance to defend yourself and you may find that a judgment is entered against you.

What is an agreed judgment?

An agreed judgment is a document that is signed by all parties to the lawsuit and filed with the court that states the defendant/consumer agrees he or she owes the full and final judgment. An agreed judgment is usually required by a creditor if you're agreeing to a long term payment plan (approximately 4 monthly payments or more). Make sure that you and the Plaintiff concurrently sign a separate settlement agreement which states that the agreed judgment would be released after the settlement is paid and that no execution on the judgment would ensue while payments are being timely made by Defendant/consumer. That is because an agreed judgment has the same effect as a judgment granted by the court.

May I ignore the judgment against me?

You should not ignore a judgment, because it is usually reflected on your credit report and is good for up to 10 years from the date it is signed by the judge. A judgment may be renewed for another 10 years. In some instances, having a judgment against you may affect your qualification of receiving certain government benefits such as subsidized housing. Additionally, a judgment creditor may attempt to collect on the judgment by applying for a bank garnishment of consumer's account or via writ of execution on consumer's non-homestead exempt property. A judgment creditor may also place a lien on the consumer's real property.

I have a judgment against me. What should I do?

You can settle the judgment with the creditor. It is not too late. To ensure that the judgment will be released upon final payment, verify that it is stated so in your settlement agreement with the judgment creditor. Once the judgment is settled and paid, then the creditor should file a document with the court to release the judgment. Sometimes, the creditor will send the original release of judgment and/or release of lien to the consumer/defendant to file it himself/herself along with an appropriate fee. Be sure to read the cover letter from the creditor carefully to determine whether any action is required on your part to secure the release of judgment against you.

PAYDAY LOANS

What is a payday loan?

A payday loan is a loan in which the lender advances cash in exchange for a personal check or authorization to debit the borrower's deposit account in a dollar amount for the amount of the loan plus a fee for making the loan. The payday lender agrees that the check or debit will not be made until a designated date in the future (typically a date on or after the person's next payday).

I just took out a payday loan and noticed the interest rate is in the 100s. Isn't this usury?

No, it is not necessarily usury. Usury means charging interest above the lawful rate. The lawful rate under Texas law is set by the Texas Constitution and by the Texas Finance Code, as further regulated in Title 7 of the Texas Administrative Code. There are myriad maximum lawful rates depending primarily on the type of loan and whether the borrower is a consumer or a business. Under Texas law, these loans can even be as much as over 500% and still be lawful. Further, if the loan is made by a "Credit Service Organization" licensed under Texas law, the loan itself will typically be at a 10% interest rate, but when the Credit Service Organization's loan broker's fee is included as interest, the APR can be well over 500% and still be legal.

If the check I gave my payday lender bounces can I go to jail?

In just about all instances, you cannot go to jail. The Texas constitution states that "no person shall ever be imprisoned for a debt." Many payday lenders require the borrower to give the lender a post-dated check. If the borrower does not repay the loan, then the lender cashes the check. If it bounces, some debt collectors may threaten that the consumer can be arrested and convicted for writing a "hot check," but Texas' "bad check" laws do not apply to checks associated with a payday loan. What the collector is referring to is the presumption for theft by check under the consolidated theft statutes. For the check to qualify as theft by check, the person writing the check must have obtained goods or services with the check. A loan is not goods or services, and therefore does not fall into the theft category. Many payday lenders have the borrower sign a debit authorization that is postdated as opposed to a check. This does not qualify as theft by check because it is not a check.

Also, the Texas Legislature has amended the Texas Finance Code to require “credit access” businesses (including payday lenders and auto title lenders) to comply with the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act which prohibits threatening consumers with criminal prosecution. The legislature also amended the Finance Code to require payday lenders to provide certain statutory notices. These laws took effect on January 1, 2012. Under the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, the lender may be liable for statutory fines if the lender threatened criminal prosecution. See the Debt Collection section above.

If you are threatened with criminal prosecution or are not given the mandatory notices, you can also contact the office of the Texas Consumer Credit Commissioner to file a complaint. The law allows the Consumer Credit Commissioner to impose fines on businesses who fail to comply with these laws. The office can be reached by calling 800-538-1579 or by visiting its website at www.occ.state.tx.us/.

I was charged a $35 fee when the check I gave my payday lender for a $100 loan bounced. My bank also charged me $30. Is this legal?

Your vendor (the payday lender) and your bank may charge you a fee. Under state law, the maximum fee for vendors is $30.00. Most banks in the State of Texas are federal banks. Federal laws do not establish maximum amounts for fees that national banks can charge on your account. These decisions are made by the bank—and may be prescribed by state law. National banks are required to disclose any fees when the deposit account is established. Review your account agreement with the bank as well as any current fee schedule.

What happens if I don't pay back a payday loan?

The answer to this question depends on many factors including (1) the documents signed and what remedies they provide the lender, (2) the amount of the loan, and (3) the lender's practices. Typically, the payday lender will send the account out for collection by a third party collection agency that will attempt collections through collection letters and telephone calls. In some rare occasions the payday lender may file a civil lawsuit against you in a court, usually in the local Justice Court. The payday lender must file the lawsuit in the county you reside in or the county in which you signed the loan documents.

CREDIT REPORTS - HOW TO PROTECT AND REPAIR

Credit reports are generated by consumer reporting agencies (also referred to as credit bureaus), which gather information from their members, such as banks and other lending institutions, about your creditworthiness. The credit history that the reporting agency maintains about you generally consists of whether you have filed for bankruptcy in the past ten years, whether you have paid your creditors on a timely basis for the past seven years, and the identity of those recently requesting your credit report. Credit reports are widely used by businesses in deciding whether or not to extend you loans or other forms of credit, by landlords in deciding whether or not to rent to you, and by employers in deciding whether or not you are a desirable employee. The main protections for consumers with respect to credit reports are provided by the federal Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA). The federal agency that regulates credit reporting agencies and enforces FCRA is the Federal Trade Commission.

How can I obtain a copy of my credit report?

If anyone takes action against you because of information supplied to them by a credit reporting agency, they are required to notify you and to give you the name, address and telephone number of the reporting agency that provided the information to them. If you request your credit report from that reporting agency within 60 days, then the agency must provide you with your credit report at no charge. You are also entitled to a free credit report from each reporting agency every twelve months by using this this website www.annualcreditreport.com or by calling 877-322-8228. You are also entitled to obtain an additional copy of your credit report if : (1) you are unemployed, and you certify that you plan to seek employment within 60 days; (2) you are on welfare; or (3) you believe your report is inaccurate due to fraud. You are limited to one credit report every 12 months for each reason. In other words, you can only seek a free credit report due to unemployment once every 12 months.

The three national credit reporting agencies are:

- Equifax, P. O. Box 740241, Atlanta, Georgia 30374-0241; 800/685-1111; www.equifax.com.
- Experian (formerly TRW), P. O. Box 2002, Allen, Texas 75013; 888/397-3742; www.experian.com.
- Trans Union, P.O. Box 1000, Chester, PA 19022; 800/888-4213; www.transunion.com.

Several words of advice are in order when you request a free credit report . First, you should request a credit report from each credit reporting agency if possible. Although much of the information overlaps, each reporting agency uses slightly different sources of information, and thus, one credit report may contain an error that the others do not. Second, only the website www.annualcreditreport.com (or the phone number associated with it) offers a completely free copy of your credit report. Other websites may contain the words “free credit report” or offer a free credit report in exchange for signing up for their paid services, but those websites are not truly free. If you get a report through one of these websites, you may end up paying for unanticipated charges. Finally, be aware that your free credit report does not include your credit score (the most common of which is called a “FICO score”) unless a lender has denied you credit or did not offer you the best interest rate. Your credit score is a calculation of your overall creditworthiness that is determined by looking at your credit report. Lenders usually look at this score along with your credit report, and it may be beneficial to look at it before taking out a loan because it can determine the interest rate of your loan. You will, however, have to pay to look at your credit score (or sign up for a free trial period at one of the pay websites mentioned above). The most reputable place for requesting a credit score is directly from the organization that calculates your FICO score at www.myfico.com. A FICO score from each agency is $19.95 per score.

One strategy for staying up-to-date on your credit history more regularly is to stagger your requests for a credit report—remember, you are entitled to one from each credit reporting agency every 12 months—so that you receive one credit report from a different reporting agency every four months or so.

How do I correct errors in my credit report?

You should notify the credit reporting agency in writing of the information you believe to be inaccurate. The agency must then investigate the disputed information (usually within 30 days). You should also forward the credit reporting agency any documents or information you have that proves the information to be inaccurate.

In conducting its investigation, the credit reporting agency must forward all relevant information you provide to its source for the disputed information. The source of the information must then conduct its own investigation and report the results of its investigation to the credit reporting agency. If the provider of the information determines that the disputed information is inaccurate, it must notify all nationwide credit reporting agencies so that they may correct the information in your file. If the source of the disputed information is unable to verify its inaccuracy, then the reporting agency must remove the disputed information from your credit report. This process of verifying the accuracy of the disputed information must generally occur within 30 days.

After the agency completes its investigation, it must provide you with the written results and a free copy of your credit report if the dispute resulted in a change. Once a disputed item is changed or removed, the reporting agency cannot reinsert the information into your file unless the information provider verifies its accuracy and completeness, and the credit reporting agency gives you a written notice that includes the name, address and phone number of the provider of the information.

Another option is to dispute the accuracy of information in your credit report with the creditor or other provider of the disputed information in your credit report.. You must dispute the accuracy of the reported information in writing, and if the creditor provides a specific address for such disputes, the dispute must be directed to that address.

If disputing the information with the credit reporting agency and/or the creditor does not resolve the matter to your satisfaction, you may request that the agency include your statement of why the information is inaccurate in your file and in all future reports it provides. The agency may charge you a fee if you ask them to provide your statement to anyone that has requested your credit report in the past. If you dispute the item directly with the creditor, then the creditor must include a notice of your dispute any time it reports the information to a credit reporting agency.

How do I prevent errors in my credit report in the first place?

Any time you receive an invoice or a demand for payment which you do not believe you owe, you should notify the creditor or collection agency in writing that you dispute the debt and demand documentation of the validity and accuracy of the amount the creditor is demanding.

Can “credit doctors” or “credit repair companies” really erase my bad credit?

No. Credit doctors or credit repair companies cannot do anything for you that you cannot legally do by yourself. Credit repair companies generally use two techniques in order to improve your credit record. The first is to dispute all information contained in your credit record in an effort to inundate the credit reporting agency. If the agency is unable to verify the accuracy of each piece of information within 30 days, they are generally required to remove the information from your credit report. Credit reporting agencies, however, may refuse to investigate frivolous disputes and cannot remove accurate information until it has expired (7 years or 10 years for bankruptcies). The second technique some credit doctors use is to provide you with a social security number that belongs to someone who has good credit. This scheme is not only fraudulent, but it is illegal and will only make your problems worse.

Be wary of companies that:

- Want you to pay for credit repair services before the company completes the job and provides you with an improved credit report. The money-back guaranties that many of these companies promise are worthless if the company is no longer in business.
- Promise to have accurate and timely (i.e., occurring in the last 7 years) information removed from your credit report.
- Advise you of ways to create a “new credit identity.”

- Promise that they have the ability to have information removed from your credit report that you could not yourself have removed, or fail to advise you up front of your legal right to remove the information yourself.

Where should I go for help to repair my credit record?

The best way to improve your credit is to gain control of your financial situation. A nonprofit credit counseling agency, Money Management International, is a good place to start. Counseling is available 24/7 by calling 866-531-3433. The Houston area also has several branch offices, which can be found at MMI's website, www.moneymanagement.org.

The United Way of Greater Houston's THRIVE program also works with families to reach real and lasting financial independence, which may include credit or debt counseling and help with family budgeting. Call United Way's 24/7 helpline at 211 for more information.

Where can I obtain additional information or report questionable conduct by creditors or credit reporting agencies?

- Submit complaints to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau at its website, www.consumerfinance.gov/complaint/#credit-report, or call 855/411-2372.
- Contact the Texas Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division through its website, www.texasattorneygeneral.gov/consumer/ or by calling its regional office at 713/223-5886.
- Contact the Better Business Bureau at 713/868-9500 or houston.bbb.org.
- Discuss the matter with your personal attorney or call the Houston Bar Association's LegalLine number at 713/759-1133. LegalLine offers free legal advice over the phone on the first and third Wednesday of every month from 5:00 – 9:00pm. The Houston Volunteer Lawyers also offers free Saturday Legal Advice Clinics at various community centers throughout Houston, typically on the first and third Saturdays of each month. The clinics run from 9:00 a.m. until spaces are filled. No appointment is necessary, but you should confirm the schedule beforehand at <http://www.hba.org/services/saturday-legal-advice-clinics/>.
- Obtain your free credit report every 12 months at www.annualcreditreport.com.

TELEMARKETING FRAUD

What is telemarketing fraud?

While many companies that use the telephone to sell goods and services are reputable, some use phony prizes, cheap products, and high-pressure sales tactics to defraud consumers. The following are representative examples of telemarketing scams:

1) An offer of free gifts. Fraudulent telemarketers frequently offer “free” gifts if you will pay shipping and handling charges, processing or redemption fees, or even gift and sales taxes before delivery. Commonly, the gifts are worth much less than the extra charges. Moreover, the gifts are not really “free” if you have to pay anything to receive them.

2) Phony contests offering prizes. As with offers of free gifts, the offer is often not what it seems. Usually no contest is ever held, and everyone is simply awarded a cheap prize. Even where a contest is actually held, your odds of winning any valuable prize are incredibly low, like one in a million. To claim the prize, you often will be asked to pay some fee, and the prize is commonly worth far less than the fee. The telemarketer may also request your credit card number for “identification” purposes or to verify that you have won a prize and then make a charge on your credit card when you thought no sale had actually been made.

3) Travel. So-called “free” or “low-cost” vacations often come with extra charges, hidden restrictions and hard-to-meet conditions. You might be required to join a travel club for a fee. A vacation-for-two may only include airfare for one or, while purportedly providing tickets for two for the price of one, may cost significantly more than two discount tickets purchased at least two weeks in advance. You could be charged extra for “peak season” reservations. As a result, your vacation ends up costing two to three times what you would have paid had you made your own arrangements.

4) Advertisements offering jobs, credit repair or loans. These advertisements instruct interested consumers to dial a toll-free 800 or 888 number for more information. When the toll-free call is made, consumers are then given a sales pitch and asked to make an advance payment by check, electronic draft or credit card. Alternatively, consumers may be asked to call a “900” number for more information, and then be charged from a few dollars to more than $50 per minute. The problem with these offers is that the service is often worth far less than the advance fee paid by consumers. That is why various state and federal laws explicitly prohibit advance fees for assisting people in obtaining permanent employment, credit repair or loans.

5) Get-rich-quick schemes. Some fraudulent telemarketers promise high-profit, no-risk investments in rare coins, real estate, gems, securities, oil and gas leases, and precious metals. These promises of “getting rich quick” are often false. Either the investment does not produce the level of profit that is promised, the level of risk is relatively high or the investment is simply worthless. Those who have been victimized before are frequently the targets, since they are often eager to recoup losses from previous deals.

6) Charities. Some unscrupulous telemarketers will say they’re calling on behalf of a charity. They may ask consumers to buy tickets for a benefit show, make a donation toward sending handicapped children to the circus, or purchase light bulbs or other household items at inflated prices, to cite a few recent examples. The problem is that often little or none of your contribution will actually go to the charity. Always seek to verify the entity who you would like to support.

7) Vitamins. Some health-conscious consumers fall prey to telemarketers selling vitamins. As with many other scams, the sales pitch may include a prize offer to get you to pay as much as $600 for a 6-month supply of vitamins that are worth as little as $25.

8) Water purifiers. Capitalizing on growing environmental awareness, some businesses are selling so-called water purification or filtration systems by telephone. Telemarketers use scare tactics to convince you that your tap water is filled with impurities or cancer-causing substances when, in fact, your drinking water is perfectly safe. Also, you may end up paying $300 to $500 for a device that is worth less than $50.

9) Phony Government Agencies. Scammers are seeking to extort money from unsuspecting citizens by pretending to be the IRS, FBI, District Attorney’s office, Department of Homeland Security or another government agency. Never give anyone your financial information and always seek to verify who you are speaking with.

10) Tax Return Services. Scammers are seeking to gain vital information from citizens by pretending to be a tax return service officer who is seeking to verify important information.

How can I protect myself?

1) Place your name and phone number on the Do Not Call Registry at donotcall.gov or by calling 1-888-382-1222. The National Do Not Call Registry gives you the choice about receiving telemarketer calls at home or on your cell phone. Most telemarketers should not call once your number has been on the registry for 31 days, and if they continue then you can file a complaint on the same website.

2) Don't be pressured. Insist on getting all information in writing before you agree to buy. At the same time, don't assume a business is legitimate on the basis of impressive-looking brochures or enthusiastic testimonials. Remember as well that, under Texas law, a telemarketer may not call your home before 9 a.m. or after 9 p.m. on a weekday or a Saturday or before noon or after 9 p.m. on Sunday.

3) Ask detailed questions before you buy. Ask how much everything costs. Find out the total amount you are obligated to pay, including all shipping and handling fees and any hidden costs. If you are purchasing a travel package, find out what is included and what the restrictions are. In addition, find out if you have to buy the airline tickets through the telemarketer and whether you are limited to traveling during certain off-peak or inconvenient times. A seller who claims that you have won a prize or contest must tell you the odds of winning each of the offered prizes, the rules for claiming the prizes, and the number of people who have received the most valuable prize in the past 12 months.

4) Check them out. Find out if any complaints have been registered against the company with the Better Business Bureau of Metropolitan Houston or the Consumer Protection Division of the Texas Attorney General's Office. In addition, contact the National Consumer League's Fraud Department, www.fraud.org/complaint, if you suspect a telemarketing call was fraudulent. But remember that scam artists frequently change names and locations. Just because there are no complaints on file with the BBB, the Attorney General, or Fraud.org does not mean a business is trustworthy. Also, check with the Registrations Unit of the Texas Secretary of State (512/475-0775) to see if the company is registered and bonded as a telemarketer as required by state law. Likewise, check with the Texas Secretary of State to find out if any credit repair clinic or loan broker is registered as a credit services organization. Similarly, check with the Texas Department of Licensing and Regulation (www.license.state.tx.us; 800/803-9202) to find out whether any firm offering to help you obtain permanent employment is registered as a personnel service. Whenever a firm is not registered as required by state law, you simply should refuse to do business with it.

5) Avoid paying advance fees for employment, credit repair or loan services. Under Texas law, no one offering to assist you in obtaining permanent employment may charge an advance fee. Likewise, businesses offering credit repair or loan brokering services must obtain a $10,000 bond and file proof of the bond with the Texas Secretary of State before charging an advance fee. Under federal law, any credit repair business using the mail or a telephone or a fax is prohibited from charging an advance fee. Similarly, a federal rule prohibits telemarketers who make interstate calls from charging advance fees for credit repair, loan brokering and assistance in recovering money lost in previous telemarketing scams.

6) Be careful about disclosing personal financial information. Don't give your credit card number over the phone unless you know the business is reputable. An easy way for a scam operator to close a deal is to get your credit card number and then make a charge for a purported sale. Similarly, do not provide your checking account number over the phone, because unscrupulous telemarketers can seek to draft against your account even without your signature.

7) Take time to make a decision before investing. Consult someone whose financial advice you trust — a banker, lawyer, accountant or friend. Have them review any contract or prospectus before you commit yourself.

8) Be careful with charitable fundraising. You have the right to know if the caller is a volunteer or a professional telemarketer/fundraiser. Don't commit yourself over the phone. Ask for written information about how much of your donation will actually go to the charity and how much will be spent on administrative and fundraising costs.

9) Above all, follow this advice: "If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is!"

10) Hang up! You have the power to say no thank you!

What can I do after I have already paid for a fraudulent product or service?

1) Payment by credit card. If you used a credit card to pay for a fraudulent product, federal law allows you to refuse to pay for goods not delivered or delivered not as represented. Claims and defenses arising out of a telemarketing sale may, in some instances, be asserted against the credit card issuer, usually the bank that issued your MasterCard, Visa, Discover or American Express card.

The only preconditions to this right are that you first make a good-faith effort to resolve the dispute with the telemarketer, the amount at stake must exceed $50, and the transaction must have occurred in the same state (or within 100 miles) of your current address. You should take the position that your telephone transaction occurred in Texas, since that is where the telemarketer initiated and completed the sale. You should not pay the disputed charge on your credit card before invoking this right, however, as payment waives the right to assert claims about the telemarketer's deceptive or fraudulent conduct against the card issuer.

Under Texas law, if you use your credit card to purchase goods or services from a telemarketer, other than a public charity, the seller has two options. First, the seller can send you a written contract fully describing the goods or services being offered, the total price charged, the name, address and business telephone number of the seller and any terms and conditions of the sale. If this option is chosen, the seller cannot make a charge on your credit card until you returned a signed contract. That would at least give you the chance to review the deal and refuse to sign if it appeared to be different from what you were promised initially. Second, the seller can charge your credit card immediately, but then you must be given the right to receive a full refund if you return the goods undamaged or cancel any services within 7 days after you received the goods or services.

Once a timely cancellation is made, the law requires the seller to make a refund within 30 days. The problem with this remedy is that many telemarketing sellers are fly-by-night operations which do not remain in one location long enough for you even to cancel. If you did cancel and failed to receive a refund within 30 days, you could complain to the Consumer Protection Division of the Texas Attorney General's Office or contact a private attorney to sue for any payments made to the telemarketer.

2) Payment by check or money order. If you pay a telemarketer by check or money order, your only certain remedy is to stop payment before the check or money order is processed. Unfortunately, this is only successful when the stop-payment order is made very promptly, usually within 2 to 3 business days after a check or money order is issued, although you may have more time when the money is being sent to a distant location.

3) Payment by cash or failure to stop payment of a check. In these circumstances, there is no remedy which will provide instant relief. Nevertheless, you should complain to the Better Business Bureau, the Consumer Protection Division of the Texas Attorney General's Office, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and Fraud.org. That might lead to a public enforcement action, but, even if such an action is filed or an indictment is issued, there is little chance of recovery unless the telemarketer had a bond and filed proof of it with the Texas Secretary of State. If you suffered a significant financial loss, you ought to consult with a private attorney to review your options.

How can I avoid telemarketing calls?

Under state law, Texas consumers can request the Public Utility Commission to be placed on a statewide no-call list by contacting the PUC at 866/896-6225 or www.texasnocall.com. Telemarketers are obligated to avoid calling anyone placed on this list. If calls persist, you should complain to the Public Utility Commission Protection Division online at www.puc.state.tx.us/consumer/complaint/NoCallForm.aspx or write PUC – Customer Protection Division, P.O. Box 13326, Austin, TX 78711-3326 or call 888-782-8477 (TTY 1-800-735-2988).

You can also seek to have your telephone number removed from many national telephone sales lists by writing the following organization that maintains a national list of persons who do not want to receive sales calls: Telephone Preference Service, c/o Direct Marketing Association, P.O. Box 9008, Farmingdale, NY 11735-9008. An online form can be found at www.dmaconsumers.org/cgi/offmailinglist/. Keep in mind, however, that there is no law that prohibits calls to individuals on this list. Current federal rules merely require that telephone solicitors maintain company-specific lists of consumers who specifically request not to receive further calls from that particular telemarketer. So you may be forced to ask every telemarketer who calls your number to remove your name and telephone number from their list.

INSURANCE

How are insurance premiums calculated?

Insurance premiums are regular payments an insured makes to purchase insurance coverage. The amount you pay depends upon various factors such as age, health, previous driving record, mortality rates, interest rate projections, etc. Actuaries (persons who compute insurance premium rates based on statistical data) apply these factors in making a series of complex calculations to establish premium rates.

What is the difference between liability and property insurance?

There are two basic types of insurance: property and liability. Property insurance insures risk of loss to your property. A property policy will typically reimburse you the value of your property that has been stolen or damaged. A liability insurance policy insures you for damages you may have caused to another person's property. For instance, if you are in an automobile accident, a liability policy protects you against claims made by a third person. A typical liability policy requires the insurance company to defend and indemnify you for your liability arising out of claims made against you.

What is PIP coverage?

Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage is included in automobile insurance and is sometimes referred to as "no fault" insurance. PIP covers you, members of your household, and any authorized driver or passenger of your automobile for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, regardless of who is at fault. PIP benefits may be applied to pay any reasonable expenses incurred for necessary medical bills, funeral services, loss of income, and household services performed by the injured person (if a non-income producer). Texas requires insurance companies to include PIP coverage in every automobile liability policy. The minimum coverage that must be offered is $2500 but you can buy more. However, you may reject PIP coverage by written request to your company.

What is uninsured/underinsured motorist coverage?

Uninsured/underinsured motorist coverage is included in automobile insurance and compensates you for injuries you sustain resulting from an accident with an uninsured/underinsured motorist (UM). If you are in an accident with an uninsured motorist, your insurance company will pay you an amount equal to what the UM's liability company would have paid if the UM carried liability insurance. The same analysis applies to underinsured motorist coverage except the amount recoverable from your company is reduced by the amount recovered or recoverable from the insurer of the underinsured motorist. The coverage generally pays for bodily injury, death and property damage. While UM coverage is usually included in Texas automobile liability policies, it can be waived and often is in non-standard policies. You should review your policy to see if UM coverage is included.

How do I know if I am covered under my insurance?

Usually, a coverage question can be resolved by looking at the policy itself. If the policy is unclear regarding your specific claim, you should contact your insurance company and ask for its interpretation of the policy language, keeping in mind the company might err on the side of noncoverage. You should also keep in mind that Texas law requires ambiguous insurance policy language to be construed in favor of the insured. Therefore, if after speaking with the company you feel the policy language is still ambiguous, you may wish to contact the Texas Department of Insurance or an attorney to assist you further. Insurance contracts have been interpreted countless times. Thus, a person specializing in insurance law will often be able to tell you how the policy language will be interpreted by a court.

How soon does the company have to pay my claim?

Chapter 542 of the Texas Insurance Code (the "prompt payment" statute) governs the amount of time an insurance company has in processing your claim. In most instances, Texas' prompt payment law requires a company to respond within fifteen days after receiving your written notice of claim. During this time, the company may ask for more information about your loss and commence its investigation of the claim. Upon obtaining all requested information, the company then has 15 business days to accept or reject your claim. If the company is unable to accept or reject your claim within 15 days, it must notify you why it needs additional time to process your claim. The company will then have up to 45 days to accept or reject your claim. (In the event of a weather-related catastrophe or major natural disaster, the claim-handling deadlines under the Texas prompt payment law are extended for an additional 15 days.) Once the company agrees to pay your claim, it must send your check or draft within five business days, in most instances. If the company rejects your claim, it must provide a reasonable explanation of its denial in writing.

What is "bad faith"?

Texas law imposes on every insurance company a duty of good faith and fair dealing with its insureds. This duty arises out of the contract of insurance between you and your insurance carrier. If a company unreasonably withholds benefits of the insurance policy from you, the company has acted in "bad faith," and you are entitled to pursue both a breach of contract action (a lawsuit seeking the benefits of the insurance contract) and a tort action (a lawsuit based on a civil wrong committed by the insurance company, which entitles you to seek damages outside of the contract resulting from the insurance company's bad faith; i.e., lost wages, emotional distress, etc.) An insurance company can commit bad faith many different ways, including: (1) unreasonably refusing to settle a case on your behalf and thereby exposing you to a potential judgment in excess of policy limits; (2) unreasonably delaying payment and/or (3) unreasonably denying a claim or cancelling a policy, etc.

What may I do if I believe I have been treated unfairly by an insurance company?

If you believe you have been treated unfairly by an insurance company and wish to take action against it, there are several avenues available to you. First, you may file a complaint with the Texas Department of Insurance. The Texas Department of Insurance allows dissatisfied consumers to collect additional claim payments and refunds to which they were entitled, but did not receive. The second avenue available to you is to attempt to negotiate a settlement either informally or through Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) such as mediation or arbitration. ADR might save the time and expense of litigation. Finally, you may sue the company directly for breach of contract and bad faith. If you are successful, you may be entitled to collect damages arising from the contract of insurance (i.e., benefits provided in the insurance contract), extra-contractual damages (i.e., award for damages arising from the insurance company's bad faith, if any) and, if the facts of your case are egregious enough, punitive or additional damages (money damages awarded to plaintiff that are intended to punish the defendant insurer to prevent similar conduct in the future).

How do I make a complaint to the Texas Department of Insurance?

You may obtain complaint forms online (www.tdi.texas.gov/consumer/complfrm.html) or by calling 800/252-3439. You may submit a complaint with the Texas Department of Insurance online, by e-mail, by mail, or by fax:

Texas Department of Insurance
Consumer Protection (111-1A)
P. O. Box 149091
Austin, Texas 78714-9091
Fax: 512/475-1771
E-mail: ConsumerProtection@tdi.texas.gov
www.tdi.state.tx.us

The online complaint form will require such informations as:

- (1) your name, address and day-time telephone number;
- (2) the exact name of the insurance company (as it appears on your policy);
- (3) the full name of any agent or adjuster who may be involved;
- (4) your policy number;
- (5) your claim number and the date of your loss, if applicable;
- (6) a concise description of your problem;
- (7) what you believe would be a fair resolution of your complaint; and
- (8) copies of all supporting documentation, including invoices, canceled checks, advertising materials, and any letters between you and the company or agent.

The Texas Department of Insurance also has a toll-free consumer helpline open weekdays from 8:00 a.m. until 5:00 p.m. to help answer your insurance questions, including questions regarding an insurance company's address, complaint history, financial strength, and license status. For answers to these questions, contact the Texas Department of Insurance Consumer Help Line at 800/ 252-3439.

How long before my potential claims against an insurance company expire?

Under Texas law, you generally have two years after the incident giving rise to your claim to either settle your claim or go to court. For a bad-faith action, you have two years from the day coverage is denied and for an action under the Insurance Code, you have two years from the date the unfair act or practice occurred. Be sure to save all correspondence with your insurance company, as these letters may come into play later for determining what date your claim accrued.

HIPAA

What information is covered by HIPAA?

The Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 ("HIPAA") covers any information about your mental or physical health or payment for your care by a covered entity. To be covered by HIPAA, information has to be kept by a covered entity, such as a health care provider or health care plan and has to be identifiable to a specific person. This information is called "protected health information" or PHI. Furthermore, the privacy and confidentiality of certain medical records relating to (1) HIV testing; (2) mental health; and (3) substance abuse are protected under state and federal laws other than HIPAA.

Is my health information stored in electronic format?

To be covered by HIPAA, the covered entity must be transmitting one of the nine HIPAA approved transactions electronically. The approved HIPAA transactions are common communications, usually between a healthcare provider and a health benefit plan; for example, an insurance claim that is submitted by your health care provider to your insurance company and the insurance payment for the services listed on that claim are both HIPAA transactions. Therefore, it is likely that at least some of your PHI is stored in electronic format.

Do I have the right to inspect and copy my health information?

Yes, although there are a few rare exceptions.

Is my authorization ever required before my information can be disclosed?

HIPAA requires your specific authorization unless disclosure is otherwise allowed. For example, your physician could not disclose your health information to your employer without first obtaining your authorization to do so. However, your physician could provide a copy of your health information to another of your physicians if you were receiving treatment from that other physician and would not have to get your authorization to do so. There are certain exceptions, however. A covered entity may disclose protected health information to comply with a court order, including an order of an administrative tribunal. Such disclosures must be limited to the protected health information expressly authorized by the order. In addition, a covered entity may disclose protected health information to comply with a subpoena and "satisfactory assurances" have been made.

Can I request restrictions on the disclosure of my information?

You have the right to request restriction of certain uses and disclosures of your information if 1) the disclosure is to a health plan for purposes of carrying out payment or health care operations

(and is not for purposes of carrying out treatment), and 2) the information pertains solely to a health care item or service for which you paid the facility out of pocket in full. However, there are exceptions, including psychotherapy notes, information compiled for use in civil, and criminal or administrative actions, and emergency treatment situations necessary to provide care.

How do I get a copy of my health information?

By contacting the health care provider and requesting a copy. You may be asked to sign a request for access to or a copy of your health information.

Do I have to pay for copies of my medical records?

Probably. HIPAA says you can be charged a reasonable, cost-based fee. This means you can be charged for supplies and staff time for copying your records. The formula for calculating the cost can be different, so some health care providers do not charge a patient. There are different rules if the copies are requested by someone other than the patient, even if the request is on behalf of the patient.

May I request the medical records of my parents or someone else for whom I am caring?

Generally, permission to access another person's medical records must first be authorized by the patient. If you have a durable medical power of attorney from the patient, then the health care provider should provide you with a copy of the records.

Is it possible to access medical records of a person who is deceased?

The personal representative designated by a will or appointed by a court to settle the deceased's affairs may gain access to medical files. Additionally, a relative may be able to receive medical information about the deceased if the information has a bearing on the relative's health.

Do I have the right to see my child's medical records?

Generally, yes. There are some exceptions. The primary exception is if the minor is the one who consents to care and the consent of the parent is not required under applicable law.

Are my child's (K-12) records of visits to the school nurse covered by HIPAA?

No. Health records kept by schools are classified as "education records" covered by the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA).

Can I revoke my authorization?

Yes, if you do so in writing and provide a copy of your revocation to the HIPAA covered entity that has your health information. However, revocations are not retroactive. In other words, the HIPAA covered entity might have already disclosed your health information based on your earlier authorization.

Does a hospital need my authorization to include me in a directory?

Hospitals routinely maintain directories, and inquiries are often made about a patient from a member of the clergy, the news media, family, and friends. If you are not in the directory, the hospital will not be able to tell visitors you are there, route phone calls, deliver flowers, and so on. Most hospitals will ask you whether you want to be included in the directory when you are admitted.

Does HIPAA allow me to get my original records?

No, HIPAA only gives you the right to get copies of your records. However, you have a right to request to inspect your original records as long as you make your request in writing and provide it to the HIPAA covered entity that has your original records.

What can I do if someone violates the HIPAA Privacy Rule?

You do not have the right to sue under HIPAA. The most you can do is file a complaint. The privacy notice you receive from your health care provider or plan is required to tell you how to file a complaint within the organization. Every HIPAA-covered entity must have a designated privacy officer. The notice should also tell you how to contact the HHS Office for Civil Rights. This is the government office charged with enforcing the Privacy Rule. Complaints can be filed online by visiting www.hhs.gov/ocr/privacy/hipaa/complaints/index.html. If you need help filing a complaint or have a question about the complaint or consent forms, please e-mail the HHS Office for Civil Rights at OCRComplaint@hhs.gov.

Does my employer have a right to my health information?

Generally no, unless you have filed a worker's compensation claim against your employer. If your employer acts as your insurance company, your employer has the right to view some of your health information, but other laws prohibit your employer from using that information against you (for example, by denying you a promotion).

What if I file a claim for worker's compensation?

Texas law offers no privacy protection for employees who file for worker's compensation. Employees filing a worker's compensation claim waive all provider-patient privilege of information or results regarding any condition or complaint reasonably related to the condition for which they are claiming compensation.

If I file a lawsuit, will I have to disclose my medical information?

Generally, if you are seeking recovery for physical injuries or emotional distress you may have to authorize disclosure of your health information related to that claim, including past medical history. However, the court may restrict the time frame and manner of disclosure if it finds such restrictions reasonable and appropriate.

Can my provider discuss my condition, treatment, and outlook with my family and friends without my written authorization?

A patient's authorization is necessary in order for your health care provider to have such conversations with your family and friends. In an emergency situation, and in the absence of patient authorization, providers may use their professional judgment in determining whether to contact or share information with family members or friends involved in your care.

Can emergency health care workers ask questions about a patient, without the patient's permission, such as the patient's name, health and treatment status in emergency situations?

Yes. Emergency health care workers can access a patient's health information while providing medical treatment.

If I find errors in my medical records, can I correct those errors?

If you believe your medical records are incorrect, you may ask your provider or health insurer to correct the information. If your provider or health insurance company did not create the health information that you believe is incorrect, or if they disagree with you and believe your health information is correct, they may deny your request.

May I receive a record of disclosures of my health information?

Your health care providers must keep track of most disclosures of your health information. You have a right to ask for a list of these disclosures.

Can I request that communications regarding my information be made confidentially to an alternative address or telephone number?

Yes, you may request that communications regarding your information be made through an alternative address or telephone number. However, if the alternative address or telephone number is invalid, you may be contacted through other means.

Can I be denied treatment or coverage if I do not give my authorization to disclose my health information?

Generally no. Treatment or health care coverage cannot be denied because you do not sign an authorization.

Where can I find more information?

More information can be found at <http://www.hhs.gov/ocr/privacy/index.html>.

LANDLORD/TENANT RELATIONSHIPS

Overview

Texas law provides for certain rights for both landlords and tenants, but in general, the terms are dictated by the rental agreement. As a prospective tenant, you do not have to agree to the terms of the rental agreement presented to you by the landlord, and you are free to negotiate. If you wish to make a change, simply write the change into the agreement and give it to the prospective landlord to review. If agreed by both parties, you should both initial the change prior to signing the lease agreement.

Safety and Peace and Quiet

As a renter, you have the right to demand that the landlord repair any condition that materially affects your health or safety. If you caused the condition, however, the landlord may be able to charge you for the repair. In addition, you have the right to “quiet enjoyment” of your property, meaning the landlord cannot interrupt your utilities except for bona fide repair. It also means that the landlord has the duty to protect you from material disruption of your enjoyment of the property. For example, if other tenants are playing loud music at 3:00 am, the landlord is obligated to do something about it.

If the property is unfit, or if the disruptions continue without redress from the landlord, you may be able to legally break the lease and vacate the property without losing your security deposit. But you must follow a predetermined set of steps prior to vacating the property and breaking your lease. The Texas Attorney General provides more information about this on its website (<https://www.texasattorneygeneral.gov/cpd/tenant-rights>).

Can I sublease my leasehold (home or apartment)?

Not unless your lease agreement expressly provides for sublease. In the alternative, you may obtain your landlord's consent to sublease the property. If you break your lease, you may be required to continue to pay rent to the landlord under the lease agreement even though you are no longer living there. But in Texas, a landlord cannot collect rent double rent for the same property. This means that, if you vacate your property prior to the end of your lease and the landlord finds a new renter, you are no longer required to pay rent under the agreement. The landlord has a good faith obligation to try to rent the property you vacated.

Before you attempt a sublease situation, however, consider that, under Texas law, you will be liable to the landlord for any rents your subtenant fails to pay. In most situations, it is better to negotiate with the landlord to let you out of the lease pending a new renter. This means that you will be completely off the lease and no longer liable for anything that occurs in the property.

Can my landlord enter my leasehold?

Whether your landlord can enter your leasehold depends on what your written lease says. If your lease has language about your landlord's right to come into your leasehold, then this language determines your landlord's right. If your lease does not specifically address your landlord's right to enter your leasehold, then your landlord probably cannot enter at any time that he wants. Rather, he may enter at reasonable times to inspect the condition of the inside of your leasehold. If your landlord enters your leasehold wrongfully, he may be liable to you for any damage he causes. Your landlord's right to enter your leasehold is restricted to a reasonable time. Further, he must act reasonably in all respects during the entry.

What are my rights if the landlord fails to pay the utility company?

If your landlord has expressly or impliedly agreed in your lease to furnish and pay for water, gas, or electric service to your dwelling, the landlord is liable to you, the tenant, if the utility company has cut off utility service to your dwelling or has given written notice to you that the utility service is about to be cut off because of your landlord's nonpayment of the utility bill.

If your landlord is liable for cutting off your utilities, you have several options. First, you may pay the utility company to reconnect or avert the cutoff of the utilities. You also may terminate the lease if you give notice to the landlord in writing that you are terminating the lease and you move out within 30 days from the date you have notice from the utility company of a future cutoff or notice of an actual cutoff, whichever is sooner. If you terminate the lease, you can deduct your security deposit from the rent owed without the necessity of a lawsuit or obtain a refund of your security deposit. Also, if you terminate the lease, you may recover a pro rata refund of any advance rents paid from the date of termination or the date you move out, whichever is later. You may also deduct from your rent, without having to take any judicial action, the amounts you paid the utility company to reconnect or avert a cutoff. If you deduct from your rent your payment of the landlord's utility bill, you must give your landlord a copy of the receipt from the utility company that shows the amount you paid to reconnect or avert cutoff of the utilities.

Additionally, you may sue and recover from the landlord actual damages, including without limitation, moving costs, utility connection fees, storage fees, and lost wages from work; one's month's rent or $500, whichever is greater; and attorney's fees. Outstanding rent or other sums owed the landlord will be deducted from these damages.

These options become available to you on the date you have notice from the utility company of a future cutoff or notice of an actual cutoff, whichever is sooner. Your options expire and you cannot use them if the following occurs: (1) your landlord gives you written proof from the utility company that all delinquent sums due the utility company have been paid in full and (2) at the time you receive the proof, you have not yet terminated the lease or filed suit under the options set out above.

Can my landlord enter my apartment, take my property, and even sell my property if I do not pay my rent?

In general, the landlord cannot lock you out of your property and hold your personal effects ransom absent following strict procedures. Only if the lease grants the right to enforce a landlord's lien and the landlord follows all of the procedures required by the law can the landlord hold your personal effects. Texas Property Code Section 54.041 creates a lien for unpaid rent that is due. The lien applies to nonexempt property in the residence.

The lien attaches to certain property that is in your residence or that you have stored in a storage room on the rental premises. This lien is called a "landlord's lien." This law permits the landlord to enter your unit in a peaceful manner, and take your property until you pay the rent owed. If you fail to pay the rent due, the landlord can sell your property. In order for the landlord to be able to exercise his rights under the landlord's lien law, he must comply with the specific requirements of the law.

The Lien

Although the Property Code creates the lien, the written lease must give the right to enforce the lien.

First, the landlord's lien is only enforceable if it is underlined or printed in conspicuous bold print in your lease agreement. If your lease does not contain language that sets forth the lien, or if your lease provides for the lien, but the language is not underlined or printed in bold letters, then your landlord cannot legally enter your leasehold and take your property. This means that if your landlord does enter your unit and takes your property without a valid lien in place, then he could be liable for damages and potentially guilty of theft.

Second, if the lien is correctly set forth in your lease, the landlord is entitled to take only certain property and must remove the property peacefully. The law prohibits the landlord from taking the following items:

- (1) wearing apparel;
- (2) tools, apparatus, and books of a trade or profession;
- (3) schoolbooks;
- (4) a family library;
- (5) family portraits and pictures;
- (6) one couch, two living room chairs, and a dining table and chairs;
- (7) beds and bedding;
- (8) kitchen furniture and utensils;
- (9) food and foodstuffs;
- (10) medicine and medical supplies;
- (11) one automobile and one truck;
- (12) agricultural implements;
- (13) children's toys not commonly used by adults;
- (14) goods that the landlord or the landlord's agent knows are owned by a person other than the tenant or an occupant of the residence; and
- (15) goods that the landlord or the landlord's agent knows are subject to a recorded chattel mortgage or financing agreement.

If your landlord takes any of the items listed above, he has broken the law.

Third, upon taking your property, the landlord or his agent must leave you a written note stating the following:

- (1) that he has entered your dwelling;
- (2) a list of each of the items that he removed;
- (3) the amount of the rent you owe;
- (4) the name, address, and telephone number of the person you may contact about the amount owed; and
- (5) that the property taken will be promptly returned on full payment of the past-due rent.

The written note must be left in an obvious place in the dwelling so that the tenant can easily see it.

Fourth, if your written lease allows, the landlord may charge you a reasonable fee for packing, removing, and storing your property that is removed.

Note: Your landlord has violated the law and could be responsible for damages if (1) your lease is not in writing, (2) you have a written lease that does not set forth the landlord's right to collect these types of charges, or (3) the charges are not reasonable.

If the written lease authorizes it, your landlord may sell or dispose of your property. If such authorization exists, the landlord must take the following steps in order to legally sell your property:

- (1) send you a note in writing not later than the 30th day before the date of the sale stating:
 - a. the date, time and place of the sale
 - b. a list of the amounts owed by you to the landlord, and
 - c. the name, address, and telephone number of the person you may contact regarding the sale, the amount owed, and your right to get your property back;
- (2) the note must be sent to you by both first-class mail and certified mail, return receipt requested, at the address that the landlord last knew was your address;
- (3) your property must be sold to the highest cash bidder at the sale;
- (4) the money received by the landlord for the sale of your property must first be used to pay for the past-due rent owed, and then if allowed by your lease reasonable packing, moving, storage, and sale costs;
- (5) any money left after payment of the rent owed and other charges as permitted by your lease shall be mailed to you at your address last known to the landlord no later than the 30th day after the date of the sale; and
- (6) if you make a written request to the landlord (which you should do) for an explanation of the money received from the sale and which amounts you owed that were paid with the money and in what order the amounts were paid, the landlord must provide you with the explanation in writing not later than the 30th day after the date on which you make your written request.

Even if your landlord complies with each of the above requirements, you may still reclaim your property at any time before the property is sold by paying the landlord or his agent all past-due rents owed, in addition to all reasonable packing, moving, storage, and sale costs authorized by written lease.

What are my rights for violations by my landlord?

As you can see, the law is very strict about the taking and selling of a tenant's property. Despite a landlord's right to exercise a lien for unpaid rents, some landlords do not comply with the requirements necessary to lawfully remove and dispose of a tenant's property. If your landlord does not follow each of the steps set forth above, then he may be acting wrongfully and you have the right to sue your landlord. If your landlord or his agent willfully violates any of the requirements discussed above, then you are entitled to get from the landlord the following:

- (1) actual damages;
- (2) the return of any property taken from your apartment that has not yet been sold;
- (3) the return of the money received by the landlord or his agent from the sale of any property taken from your apartment;
- (4) one month's rent or $500.00, whichever is greater, less any amount for which you are liable to the landlord; and,
- (5) reasonable attorney's fees.

Before you file suit, you may want to talk with your landlord to try to get your property back. Remember, even if your landlord has wrongfully taken your property, you will still be responsible for any past-due rent. Accordingly, your landlord has the right to evict you and sue to collect the unpaid rent. Sometimes, working with your landlord to resolve the situation may be better than fighting in court.

If I am injured on the leased property, is the landlord responsible for my injuries?

Maybe. "Premises liability" includes liability arising out of all physical conditions on or of real property which can result in injury. In recent years, the primary focus on this issue has been in security-related cases where an owner or operator of a premises has been held liable for the criminal acts of third parties. Premises liability is not governed by statute; instead it is based on negligence principles. The mere fact that the landlord owns the real property does not make him automatically liable for your injuries. Generally speaking, for the landlord to be liable three elements must be present. First, the landlord must owe you a duty of care. Second, the landlord must breach that duty. Third, you must have suffered damages caused by the landlord's breach of his duty of care. The landlord generally owes no duty to you or your invitees, even for injuries caused by unsafe conditions or criminal intrusions. However, the landlord owes you a duty of care when your injuries arise from: (a) the landlord's negligent repairs, (b) concealed defects in the premises that the landlord was aware of at the time of the lease, or (c) a defect in the premises that remained under landlord's control.

Landlord's Negligent Repairs

The duty of care regarding repairs can be established in two ways. First, once your landlord undertakes to repair something in your unit, his duty to use ordinary care is established. Second, once you demand that the landlord make a repair that he is obligated to make based on your lease or applicable statute, a similar duty is established.

Concealed Defects

Concealed defects in the premises similarly establish a landlord's duty of care. The landlord can only be liable, however, when (1) he knew about the defective condition at the time of the transfer, (2) did not tell you about it, and (3) you neither knew nor should have known about the defect.

Defect in Premises Under the Landlord's Control

Defects in common areas and other areas remaining under the landlord's "control" establishes the third basis for the landlord's duty of care. The landlord is generally not liable for injuries occurring on the premises leased and controlled by you. Accordingly, the main inquiry is whether your landlord had control of the place in which the injury arose.

Landlords typically control common areas, such as stairwells and doorways, and owe you a duty to keep these areas in reasonably safe condition. If your landlord employs an on-site property manager, both the landlord and the property manager will typically have the right to “control” the property. If the landlord has delegated all right to control the daily management of the premises to the property manager, then the landlord may not owe you a duty of care. However, if the landlord has not acted responsibly and failed to exercise reasonable care in selecting a manager, he may be liable for your injuries despite his delegation of control.

Accordingly, if you were injured inside your specific leased space (e.g., your apartment unit, or your house) which you control on a daily basis, then your landlord probably owes you no duty, and would not be liable for your injuries. The exception to this rule is if you were injured by a condition inside your particular unit that was the landlord’s responsibility to maintain.

If you were injured in a common area on the premises (e.g., a parking lot, or recreation area), then either or both the owner and property manager may owe you a duty of care.

Having determined that your landlord owes you a duty, specifically what is his duty? The landlord’s duty to you as a tenant is to use ordinary care to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition.

The next element to ascertain is whether the landlord breached this duty. For the landlord to have breached his duty, the following must exist:

- (1) The landlord must have actual or constructive knowledge of some condition on the premises caused by the landlord;
- (2) The condition posed an unreasonable risk of harm;
- (3) The landlord did not exercise reasonable care to reduce or eliminate the risk; and
- (4) The landlord’s failure to use reasonable care caused your injury.

The type of conditions that may constitute a breach of the duty to keep the premises reasonably safe include physical defects in a premises (e.g. malfunctioning elevator doors, uneven exterior tiling), and substances spilled or which fall on the premises (e.g. water on tile floors). More questionable is the lack of protection against the criminal activities of third parties. The situations in which a landlord must provide protection and the level of protection required are unclear. For instance, even if a condition that poses an unreasonable risk of harm exists on the property, the landlord of the property does not breach a duty by reason of the mere existence of that condition unless the landlord “knew or should have known” that the condition existed and failed to remedy the condition. The key issue therefore is whether the landlord knew or should have known that an unreasonable risk of harm from third party criminal acts existed. To answer this question, you must establish that either (A) the landlord knew that the condition existed and failed to remedy the condition as a reasonable person would have, or (B) the condition existed for a sufficient period of time, and that the landlord should have discovered the condition and removed it in the exercise of ordinary care.

HOMEOWNER RIGHTS

Liens

I've paid my contractor, but one of the subcontractors filed a lien. Can he do that?

Yes, he can. Because you do not have a contract directly with the subcontractor, payment to the general contractor does not get rid of the subcontractor's lien rights. The validity of a lien is a highly technical issue, and we recommend you consult with a lawyer. Here are some general rules regarding filing a lien against a homestead.

First, no mechanic's lien can be created against a homestead unless the general contractor, not the subcontractor, met very specific statutory requirements prior to the start of construction. To create a valid lien against a homestead, (1) the contract between the homeowner and the general contractor must be in writing and signed before work commences, (2) if the owner is married, both spouses must sign the contract, and (3) the contract must be filed with the clerk of the county in which the homestead is located. Many residential contracts are signed by only one spouse. Very few contracts are filed with the County Clerk. Both of these deficiencies render any liens invalid.

Second, the subcontractor has to give notice that he has not been paid within two months of when the work was performed. This notice letter must be sent to both the owner and the general contractor for each month the subcontractor has not been paid. Failing to give proper notice takes away the right to file a lien.

Third, the subcontractor has to file his lien within three months of when all of the work performed on a project was completed. Fourth, an owner that receives a proper notice that a subcontractor has gone unpaid and instructing the owner to withhold funds has the right to withhold payments owing the general contractor in amount sufficient to pay the claim until the time for filing the affidavit of mechanics lien has passed, or if a lien affidavit has been filed, until the lien claim is satisfied or released. In this way, the homeowner can assist in paying the subs.

Finally, the homeowner is required to withhold 10 percent of the total project price, known as "retainage," until 30 days after the project is completed. Retainage is used to pay subcontractor claims that are timely presented. If a claim is not made during the 30 days, the owner may release the retainage and isn't liable to any subcontractor. If the subcontractor makes a claim, the owner is liable only up to the 10 percent retainage plus any monies withheld in response to the subcontractor's notice letter described above.

Warranties

My contract with my remodeler did not contain any written warranties, and now I am having problems with the work. What do I do since I do not have any written warranties?

Texas law provides that all residential projects have certain minimum implied warranties of good and workmanlike performance. But this implied warranty may be superseded when the parties' agreement sufficiently describes the manner, performance, or quality of the services. In other words, the description of the work done may constitute an express warranty that takes the place of the implied warranty.

In other home contracts, there are express warranties that are clearly laid out. These warranties have different time limitations, which mean you need to make your claims timely. The typical warranty periods are:

- one year for workmanship and materials;
- two years for plumbing, electrical, and heating and air-conditioning delivery systems; and
- ten years for major structural components of the home.

For remodeling projects, the warranty period begins when the project is substantially complete. For new construction, the warranty period begins to run when title is transferred or the homeowner occupies the home.

Therefore, unless your problem has to do with the foundation, plumbing, electrical work or AC/heating units, you only have a year to make your warranty claim. For everything else, you must notify the remodeling company in writing of the problem within a year from when the remodeling company finished their work. If you do not, you may lose your right to have the remodeling company fix the problem at their expense. Because there are a number of warranties governed by law, most of which have strict timelines, we recommend that you consult an attorney if you feel that a warranty has been breached.

Contracts for, and work done on, the home may fall under the Texas Deceptive Practices Act (“DTPA”). Consult the DTPA section above for more information.

RESOURCE AND REFERRAL NUMBERS

GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Attorney General's Office for the State of Texas	800/621-0508 or 713/223-5886
(handles consumer complaints against individual or business; will send forms to consumer to fill out, and assign a moderator to work out the problem www.oag.state.tx.us)
Consumer Protection Division
808 Travis, Suite 1520
Houston, Texas 77002
Texas Department of Banking	512/475-1300
(supervises state chartered banks www.dob.texas.gov)		877/276-5554
Bankruptcy Court, Southern District of Texas www.txs.uscourts.gov	713/250-5500
State Comptroller's Office / Sales and Use Tax	800/252-5555
Texas Consumer Credit Commissioner	800/538-1579
(regulates small loans, pawn loans, motor vehicle installments loans, home equity lending and secondary mortgage loans with interest rates higher than 10%.
www.occc.state.tx.us)
Consumer Fraud/Harris County District Attorney's Office	713/755-5836
www.dao.hctx.net
Consumer Product Safety Commission	800/638-2772
(can investigate product safety complaints against consumer products www.cpsc.gov)
Governor's Office Hotline	800/843-5789
www.governor.state.tx.us
Houston 311 Help & Information Center	713/837-0311
or 311
City of Houston Health & Human Services Department	832/393-5169
www.houstontx.gov/health
City of Houston Housing & Community Development Dept	713/868-8300
(landlord/tenant disputes, housing discrimination complaints www.houstonhousing.org)
Insurance Consumer Line, Texas Department of Insurance	800/252-3439
www.tdi.texas.gov
Texas Department of Motor Vehicles	800/622-8682
(handles complaints about manufacturer's defects and Lemon Law)
www.dot.state.tx.us
National Fraud Information Center	online only
(handles complaints about contracts or interest rates charges by telemarketing and Internet companies www.fraud.org)
Office of Customer Protection	512/936-7000
www.puc.state.tx.us
Justice Court Information (formerly Small Claims Court)	713/755-5125
www.hctx.net
Labor Law Department of Texas Workforce Commission	800/832-9243
(handles salary complaints and dispute www.twc.state.tx.us)
Workforce Solutions	888/469-5627
www.wrksolutions.com

CONSUMER SERVICES

Better Business Bureau	713/868-9500
1333 West Loop South, Suite 1200 Houston, Texas 77027 www.bbbhou.org
National Do Not Call Registry (to be removed from solicitation lists)	888/382-1222
www.donotcall.gov
Texas No Call List	866/896-6225
www.texasnocall.com

HELPFUL NUMBERS

Certified Public Accountant (CPA) Referral Service	Online only www.houstoncpa.org
Chamber of Commerce, Greater Houston Partnership	713/844-3600
www.houston.org
Houston Apartment Association	713/595-0300
www.haaonline.org
Houston Association of Realtors	713/629-1900
www.har.com
Harris County Medical Society	713/524-4267
www.hcms.org
Department of Motor Vehicles	800/558-9368
www.dot.state.tx.us		512/463-8588
National Association of the Remodeling Industry	713/621-6274
(Non-profit organization for contractors/suppliers)
www.narihouston.com

LEGAL RESOURCES

Dispute Resolution Center	713/755-8274
(handles disputes between neighbors, families, friends, consumers/merchants, landlords/tenants & employers/employees www.drchouston.org)
Grievance Committee of the State Bar of Texas	713/758-8200
(Houston office which handles complaints against local attorneys www.texasbar.com)
Lone Star Legal Aid	713/652-0077 or 800/733-8394
(pro-bono legal assistance for non-criminal cases; must meet program requirements.)
www.lonestarlegal.org
State Bar of Texas Client Attorney Assistance Program	800/932-1900
www.texasbar.com
Houston Lawyer Referral Service, Inc.	713/237-9429
(free referral to a specialized attorney www.hhrs.org)
Houston Volunteer Lawyers	713/228-0732
(pro bono legal assistance for non-criminal cases; must meet program requirements)
www.makejusticehappen.org

LegalLine713/759-1133
 (free legal advice sponsored by the Houston Bar Association from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., on the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month. www.hba.org)
Hispanic and Mexican-American Bar Association's Consejos Legales713/759-1133
 (Spanish language legal advice over the phone, 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., 1st Thursday of each month)

CREDIT COUNSELING

Consumer Credit Counseling Services & Management Intl. . 713/923-2227 or 866/889-9347
 (financial counseling and debt management www.moneymanagement.org)
Credit Coalition713/224-8100
 (free financial literacy classes www.creditcoalition.org)

CREDIT BUREAUS

(consumer assistance for persons denied credit, employment or insurance; provides complimentary annual credit report)
Equifax800/685-1111
www.equifax.com
Trans Union Credit Information800/916-8800
www.transunion.com
Experian (formerly TRW)888/397-3742
www.experian.com
Free Credit Report877/322-8228
www.annualcreditreport.com

USEFUL PUBLICATIONS

TYLA Pamphlets800-204-2222 ext. 1529
 The Texas Young Lawyers Association publishes pamphlets on foreclosure, bankruptcy and other consumer issues. To download copies of the pamphlets, visit www.tyla.org. Go to menu item Resources/General Public/Consumer Issues for a list of publications.
HBA Consumer Law Handbook713/759-1133

Individual copies are available free of charge from the Houston Bar Association, 1111 Bagby, FLB Suite 200, Houston, Texas 77002. To obtain one handbook by mail, please send a check or money order for $2.00 in order to cover shipping costs. Please call the HBA office at 713/759-1133 for more information about obtaining multiple copies.

All HBA Legal Handbooks are available online, and some in other languages, at www.hba.org.

Houston Bar Association
1111 Bagby, FLB Suite 200
Houston, Texas 77002
713-759-1133
www.hba.org

