I. Introduction

This is the first attempt by the Linguistics Strand, School of Humanities and Social Sciences (SHSS), University of Papua New Guinea (UPNG), to document the impact of mobile phone technology on language use amongst UPNG students and, by extension, to describe the flowering of this new mode of communication amongst the broader youth community and PNG society as a whole.

A brief discussion of some basic technical concepts, followed by an outline of the historical evolution of SMS world-wide (and in PNG, in particular), introduces the 'Tok' harvested in 2009 from UPNG Waigani and Taurama campuses by a research team of senior UPNG sociolinguistics students.

This volume of research findings into the ongoing language change in Papua New Guinea, apart from listing a glossary of most popular 'currency of thought exchange,' also provides a comparative analysis of UPNG student lingo with texting vocabularies in the English-speaking world and beyond.

What is SMS?

SMS stands for Short Message Service, a.k.a. SMS messages, short messages or SMSing. This technology is available in cell phones and, more recently, in other digital devices (such as BlackBerry and other WAP¹-enabled technologies). It is also referred to as 'text message,' 'message,' and simply 'txt.' This service allows text messages of abound 150 characters to be sent /received via a wireless network. SMS is much cheaper than regular phone calls, which explains why text messaging is currently the most widely used data application on planet Earth, with 2.4 billion active users (i.e., 74% of all mobile phone subscribers) sending and receiving text messages on their phones.²

Characteristic Features of SMS

The 'compactness' of the SMS medium (the need to 'stuff' as much information as possible into the strictly rationed 150 or so characters), coupled with the 'unfriendliness' of the small phone keypads, unleashed the creativity of our generalizing minds, giving rise to a new variety of 'meaning-saturated' language – SMS, texting, smsing, or simply messaging (also called web or net lingo). Shaped by the need to economize on characters and keystrokes, SMS lingo makes extensive use of abbreviations, such as "C U l8er" for "See you later," "d8" for "date" or "B4" for "before," "communic8" for "communicate," etc. Common acronyms for set phrases and collocations are also a major feature of SMS, i.e., TMI (too much information), WTF (what the *freak), IMHO (in my humble opinion), LMAO (laughing my *butt off), etc. Emoticons ("smileys") fill in for 'body language' – they soften the abruptness of the medium and amplify the message communicated.

² http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Short_message_service

The use of numbers to replace words, and vowel deletion in easily recognizable words (i.e. "txt msg") is typical in all texting lingos. Capitals often represent the letter name as it is pronounced when you recite the alphabet, whereas lower case letters typically represent the soft sound of the consonants (i.e. the word "XLNt" is "exc-ell-en-t").

SMS isn't restricted to English. For example, in Mandarin Chinese, numbers that sound similar to words are used instead of the words themselves (example: "5 2 1" in Chinese "wu er yi," sounds like "wo ai ni" or "I love you"; similarly "4 7 8" or "si chi ba" phonetically matches the request to "drop dead").³ The emergence of SMS lingos (which sprang up in all societies that use the technology) provides us with a kind of 'replay' of the birth of human language in real time; a closer look at the rise and development of texting lingo can help us understand the origins of human language generally.

The SMS Serendipity: History

Serendipity is a funny word... difficult to translate, it means, basically, a 'fluke': 'luck, or good fortune, in finding something good accidentally'⁴ – that was exactly what happened when the spread of mobile phone technology had produced an unintentional side effect – SMS!

SMS dates back to the early 1980s, when the idea of adding text message to mobile telephone service began to take hold. Text messaging was first used to send messages (voicemail alerts, etc.) from mobile telephone service providers to the users. Later, the service broadened to include text messaging between individual mobile users.

The SMS serendipity, its completely unexpected accidental success, took the mobile industry by surprise. Nobody in the 1990s could have imagined this so 'user-unfriendly' service sweeping through the world the way it did, with hardly any promotion by network operators.

Paradoxically, it was precisely because SMS was so very difficult to use, that it became popular amongst young users who easily overcame the challenges of the 'man-machine interface' and, in fact, reveled in SMS 'exclusivity,' as it provided them with a channel of communication all their own.

The advent of prepay mobile phones 'exploded' SMS popularity. The main reason for the exponential growth of SMS was that network operators were technically unable to bill people for the service, as the links between the prepay platform, the billing system, and the SMS Centers had not yet been set up! It made no business sense for the network operators, therefore, to promote SMS (they would only stand to lose on their call charges, you see, if people had figured out a way of communicating information for free!) It did not take long, however, for the technically savvy youths to become aware of this loophole – the rest is history...

⁴ Source: http://www.yourdictionary.com/serendipity# (18/10/2009)

Suddenly, millions more SMS messages hit the airwaves, with some individual phone subscriptions accounting for thousands of messages per month, as they had set up automated message generators.⁵ Network operators scrambled to implement SMS charges for prepay customers. Meanwhile, SMS became a pandemic, as it cost nothing, whereas communicating the same message using voice was quite expensive. Eventually, the network operators managed to impose SMS charges for prepay users by deducting the cost of an SMS message from the prepaid credit. This at first led to a sharp drop in SMS usage, but only for a short while; SMS soon picked up again and has grown exponentially ever since. The chart below illustrates the SMS 'explosion in the USA:

Source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Short_message_service

SMS is often referred to as a 'grassroots revolution that the mobile industry had next to nothing to do with and repeatedly reacted to.'⁶

Reasons for Exponential Growth of SMS

This remarkable growth of SMS use has been fueled by a number of socio-economic reasons:

1. SMS – a new tool to fulfill an existing communication need: SMS technology enabled people to communicate silently over distance, and at any time (thus knocking down social restrictions, parental control, etc.)

⁵ http://www.funsms.net/sms_history.htm

⁶ http://www.funsms.net/sms_history.htm

- 2. SMS is cheap: it took root while it was free; the charges imposed later were not high enough to stem its growth, as SMS had already become an important part of young people's networking tactics.
- 3. SMS is 'cool': the exclusiveness of this new technology made it popular, even fashionable, amongst the educated tech-savvy youths
- 4. SMS is private: its coded messages are largely incomprehensible to the adults (parents, teachers and other 'authority' figures)
- 5. Mass literacy & high-tech skills: young people around the world were able to seize on this technology, because of widespread literacy /technical skills
- 6. Customized Ringtones added to SMS 'coolness'
- 7. Accessibility of cell phones, particularly in the developing economies of Asia, Africa, Latin America, and the South Pacific, further catalyzed the spread of SMS.

SMS in Today's World

Cell phone technology has had a tremendous social, economic and cultural impact around the world, changing the way people communicate and use language. In China, the world's most populous country, where it was initially popular only among tech-savvy youngsters, SMS-ing has now become an important, fast, low-cost and convenient tool of communication for people of all ages (high literacy there was a catalyst for its spread).⁷ The same is happening in Britain, where texting lingo is going mainstream, according to the Oxford Dictionaries:

A new form of language is sweeping across Britain. The rapidly expanding use of text messages, with over one million messages being sent every hour, has led to the inclusion of a list of SMS abbreviations in the dictionary. Judy Pearsall, Publishing Manager for English Dictionaries, said: "In Oxford Dictionaries, we have been monitoring the phenomenal growth of text messaging with great attention: its influence is now such that we felt it was time to treat is as an integral part of English."⁸

According to the cited Oxford University website, the newly revised edition of the Concise Oxford Dictionary will be the 'first mainstream dictionary to include text message abbreviations and emoticons.' By way of example, they use SMS (with translation into plain English):

WERV U BIN? PPL R starting to use SMS abbreviations all the time; OTOH not everyone understands what BCNU means. 2 SIT W/ SOM1 by MOB or email, SMS abbreviations R GR8. IOW, JIC SOM1 sends U a MSG like this, U need a COD 2 decipher it. HTH :-)

Where have you been? People are starting to use SMS abbreviations all the time; on the other hand, not everyone understands what 'be seeing you' means. To stay in touch with someone by mobile or email SMS abbreviations are great. In other words, just in case someone sends you a message like this, you need a Concise Oxford Dictionary to decipher it. Hope this helps.

SMS in Papua New Guinea

Mobile phones have also had a profound effect on all aspects of PNG society, particularly after Digicel started its operations here in early 2007. Affordable prices made this technology widely accessible to the general population. In practical terms, Digicel and Telikom BMobile have now effectively 'networked' the entire country.

In just about three years, we have seen tremendous changes in the way people communicate. Everybody – students and teachers, professionals and housewives, politicians, villagers and even traders in local markets – all use mobile phones today. However, it is the educated youth of Papua New Guinea (highschool and university students, in particular) that turned to texting (largely because it is much cheaper than making a call) and created a whole new language of their own – "SMS" or "texting."

The same universal incentives and constraints underlie the development of SMS lingo in PNG

- 1. SMS a new tool to fulfill an existing communication need: SMS provided a new way of instant silent communication for all literate people (and, particularly, young literate people) in PNG
- 2. SMS is cheap a lot cheaper than phone calls
- 3. SMS is 'cool' particularly in tropical Papua New Guinea!
- 4. SMS is 'adult-proof': its innovative symbols are incomprehensible to the more conservative adults (parents, guardians, lecturers, teachers, etc.); one can even use it in exams, on 'vibrate' mode!
- 5. Literacy & tech skills: students in PNG have the necessary skills
- 6. Customized ringtones made cell phones even 'cooler' in PNG
- Accessibility cell phones in PNG, first promoted by Telikom BMobile, became commonplace in PNG after the advent of the cheaper Digicel service in early 2007
- 8. Un-user-friendly keypads & limited number of characters per message prompted users to code complex messages into a mixture of acronyms and numbers corresponding to particular sounds or letters on the keypad; i.e., b4, 2nite, 18, r8, m8, d8, etc.

About three years after Digicel took PNG market by storm, mobile phones have become part of urban Papua New Guinea culture (and beyond); anywhere – be it the government offices, hospitals and clinics, the city markets, schools or the villages – you see people texting or calling on their cell phones. This extraordinary social and cultural change motivated us to take a close look at it.

II. Study Objectives

In this study, we attempted to record the 'texting lingo' used by UPNG students at the present time. Our analysis of SMS lingo origins and evolution views it in the context of the universal principles of human cognition as described by David Hume⁹. We contend that UPNG student "texting" lingo is just another 'Language game' we play, shaped primarily by the universal principles of human understanding, and modified by the new incentives and constraints of the SMS medium. This new lingo has evolved to meet our communication needs, which include

- 1. Need to name new concepts
- 2. Need for a cheaper/ more economical way of communicating
- 3. Need for an easier, faster and more compact way of communicating typed messages, and
- 4. Need to ensure that targeted coded messages are incomprehensible to the 'uninitiated.'

This volume presents the first glossary of SMS texting lingo ever recorded in PNG; in addition, it also contrasts language use at UPNG with Web lingo already documented on the Internet.

III. Methods of Data Collection & Analysis

Close observation of language use in the student community was corroborated by a crosssectional survey, using convenience sampling. Anonymous pre-tested questionnaires, designed to 'harvest' the texting lingo of the UPNG student community, ¹⁰ were distributed to individual cell phone users in all six schools of the University of Papua New Guinea, namely:

- 1. Waigani Campus:
 - a. School of Humanities & Social Sciences
 - b. School of Natural & Physical Sciences
 - c. School of Business Administration
 - d. School of Law
 - e. School of Communication Arts (aka the Melanesian Institute of Arts & Communication or MIAC)
- 2. Taurama campus: School of Medical and Health Sciences.

A total of 143 willing participants filled out the questionnaires, which were retrieved a few days later. Collected data were collated in three separate spreadsheets, listing SMS use in Tok Pisin, English, and Tok Ples.

III. Discussion

'Texting Lingo' (teen lingo, smsing, or simply texting) is thriving in the UPNG community, as the sheer volume of our 'haul' suggests (over a thousand items in each list). The changes in language use are significant, to the extent that an 'uninitiated' speaker of English or Tok Pisin will not be able to understand this new language. These changes include morphological and lexical innovation, as well as semantic shift (change in existing meanings). In particular, we found the following tendencies in the texting practice:

- Words tend to be shortened to represent the way they sound; this is done either through vowel deletion in easily recognizable words (i.e. 'txt msg'; but → bt; between → btwn; want → wnt, etc.), through supplementary use of numbers to represent similar sounds (i.e., 18, b4, want → 1t, hate → 8, mate → m8,etc.), or omission of 'mute' letters (what → wat, etc.)
- 2. People commonly use acronyms (such as LOL for 'laugh out loud,' OMG for 'Oh, my God' or TMI for 'too much information,' etc.
- 3. Economy of time, though important, is not the only consideration many people, trying to be creative, use fancy symbols which may require more time to type out, such as @ for 'at,' for example (what they lose in time, they gain in 'coolness').
- 4. Code switching, especially from Tok Pisin to English, is, perhaps, the main distinguishing feature of student SMS lingo at UPNG.
- 5. Tok Pisin pronunciation also affects texting in English; for example, BC for the word busy is used when texting in English. People generally tend to represent the sound of the language, not the spelling, e.g. call \rightarrow kol, feel \rightarrow fil, etc.

Students attribute these tendencies to the following constraints / purposes of usage:

- 1. Economic: texting is a lot cheaper than calling.
- 2. Confidentiality: "We code our messages using symbols that only the people we communicated with will understand. This is to prevent others from knowing what is being conveyed."
- 3. Time saving: "We try to put a message in the shortest possible way we can when we do not have enough time to communicate."
- 4. Laborious Process: "With the structural design of the key pad, writing the message in full is a real laborious process. We might wear out the buttons and also our fingers. It also takes time; therefore we shorten the words or use other symbols, numbers or letters of the alphabet and other built-in symbols."

Our results provide baseline data on the development of SMS lingo in English and Tok Pisin amongst UPNG students in the past 3 years (2007-2009). Our data on the use of Tok Ples texting, however, proved to be scanty, as Tok Ples use is restricted to 'wantok' communication. We were, however, able to establish that texting lingo has flourished in all the languages spoken in our community. This publication will hopefully facilitate more effective communication within the student community and the PNG society as a whole, and will serve as the basis for a more extensive collection of PNG SMS lexicon (dictionary) in the future.

The evolution of SMS as a world-wide phenomenon also corroborates the theory of language origins¹¹ and development as a result of (1) the need to communicate, and (2) the ability of the human brain to associate ideas by Resemblance, Contiguity in time or space, and Cause & Effect. Our data show that the universal principles of human logic (generalization) that govern all linguistic structures have also shaped those of SMS. Appendices provide a sample of the Questionnaire used in the study and a selected list of SMS abbreviations from Webopedia, which provides a basis for data comparison.

THE UNIVERSITY OF PAPUA NEW GUINEA School of Humanities & Social Sciences Linguistics & Modern Languages Strand

Influence of new technologies on language use amongst UPNG students Project

Cell Phone User's Informed Consent Form

- 1. The Influence of new technologies on language use amongst UPNG students Project aims to
 - a. record and describe texting lingo amongst cell phone users in UPNG
 - b. compile a glossary of SMS lingo used by UPNG student community
 - c. compare the 'indigenous' texting lingo with American SMS (also called Teen Lingo, Netlingo, Weblingo, Onlinelingo, etc.).
- 2. What do we need from You? We want you to fill out the attached anonymous pretested questionnaire and return it to us as soon as possible.
- 3. Why do we need this information from you? We need it so we can create a list of UPNG SMS lingo.
- 4. Project risks/ benefits: There are no risks. The list of texting abbreviations we want to create will help us all use SMS faster and more cost-effectively.
- 5. Freedom of Choice: You are free to decide whether or not to participate in this study.
- 6. Confidentiality: You are guaranteed total anonymity. Your name will not appear in any part of the questionnaire or elsewhere in this study.

If you have any questions regarding this project, I will do my best to answer them; you may also contact my project supervisor on 3267136 in KD 231.
