Martial Arts training, in the most simple terms, is the study and practice of self-defence. This involves training both the body and mind to be prepared to protect yourself or others in a violent situation. Martial Arts training (as with any physical activity) carries with it certain inherent risks. These risks include, but are not limited to:

- Physical:

In the course of training, students can expect to perform and be exposed to fast and dynamic physical movements. In order to prepare the body to perform these movements; emphasis is placed on improving physical fitness and flexibility. In order to practice the self-defence techniques that are learned; violent actions will be simulated in a controlled environment. These violent situations include the practice of striking, control holds, choke holds, and joint manipulation with training partners. While reasonable care will be undertaken by the instructor(s) and/or training partners involved; no guarantee can be offered against any personal injury or death. I certify that I am healthy enough to undertake the physical activities set out in this agreement; and any/all relevant pre-existing medical conditions or injuries are disclosed as follows: _____

- Psychological:

In order to practice the self-defence techniques that are learned; violent actions will be simulated in a controlled environment. These violent situations include the practice of striking, control holds, choke holds, and joint manipulation with training partners. While simulating and/or practicing violent actions; there exists a risk of possibly causing new trauma or triggering memories of past psychologically traumatic events.
