"[Humans] have always worshipped some divinity. How then can Paul say that they are without God? . . . [Because] everyone builds and forges their own conception of God, and we know that our minds are like a store of idolatry and superstition. . . There then is what we are! And it may properly be said that we are without God, when we stray in that manner in our own thoughts and in our false opinions."

(J. Calvin, Sermons on Ephesians, 179–80)
