Setting their second joint project in the hothouse environs of art school makes for ripe, hilarious jabs at college-aged Artforum fatuousness. The fringe freaks are still there—just relegated to the fringes, along with any humanist moments that could indicate genuine empathy. The twist-of-fate climax strives for a greater truth about opportunistic extremes, but the material is too thin to make any lasting impact. The result, though, is more like a promising sketch rather than a truly absorbing portrait. Members of the class of—the first to graduate under the Genes to Society curriculum—reflect on their medical school experiences.

Here they share their thoughts about the curriculum, instructors and classmates and life in Baltimore. Skip Navigation. Biomedical Odyssey. Read the blog. Celebrate Match Day.
