Living In
The World,

Yet Not Of It

What does that mean? It is a phrase that I grew up hearing in church that always had me baffled and no one could give a satisfactory explanation of it. How was I to be in the world?

Consequently, I didn't pay too much attention to it and truly was thrown to-and-fro in the winds of consciousness. Oh yeah, I learned a lot of what not to do, but it took decades and four years of study in consciousness and quantum theory before I understood I had the power to be in any state of consciousness I chose. The more I trusted that, the greater I felt the already present faith of Source, God, the "I", the Universal Presence, whatever you call it. This trust allowed It to take precedence over the conditions I was experiencing.

That brought new possibilities for the choices I had available to me. Staying in that power is a practice, and practice makes perfect - a true concept. Letting go and letting faith take command is taking the unwanted stress out of my life.

What I Can Do Now to Change My State of Mind: The only thing constant in life is change. We are either living by default from our childhood conditions and beliefs, or we recognize other choices and begin to stir the pot to create change. On my hunt to do just that, I gleaned a lot of information from many avenues and all pointed to the inside job of sifting and sorting through what I wanted and didn't want. That led to a major forgiving of my past and those involved. The common denominator was me - in every situation, there I was. The major part of forgiveness was for myself.

Simply getting out of my own way was the biggest challenge which also completed the surrender. Thinking I knew it all was my first mistake. I knew nothing!

If the etymology of adventure includes occurrence, risk, event, and chance, we are invited to look at where we are allowing this

One Life to show up, where are we taking holy risks to evolve, how often are we taking chances (opportunities) to let our Spiritual Magnificence be our experience.

Sunday, May 16th
This Too Is God
Jeffon Seely

So many taboo topics many of us will not touch, each of these must also be God, right? No matter the political affiliation, sociological and cultural experiences, religious and spiritual paths, also God, right?

What could shift if we embraced and communicated courageously, openly and vulnerably about these things many of us avoid?

Sunday, May 30th
Boldly Living a New Story
Eugene Holden, RScP

What stories about our individual and collective past do we transitioned: 9/11, the AIDS quilts, Día de los Muertos (Day of the Dead), biblical genealogies, are a few examples. Giving ourselves opportunities to remember, reflect, and honor Life/God as It has shown ItSelf as each person, allows their power, story, love to live on in us.

continue to tell that, if we are honest, we know are not the most life affirming stories? What if this Sunday we commit to changing the narrative?

Imagine being so bold as to Truly embody Principle as author, not precedent!
