PITTSBURGH, PA – Body Farm, a Pittsburgh-produced feature-length film, celebrates the announcement of a new digital streaming deal with a theatrical screening on February 22 at 7pm at The Lamp Theatre in Irwin, PA.

The film will screen on five services in 60 different territories beginning March 1, 2020. It will be available on Amazon Prime, DirecTV, Google Play, iTunes, and Microsoft TV & Movies.

Body Farm follows an independent film company that sends a videographer ahead of a story. She goes to investigate a body farm where human decomposition is researched.

The footage that is sent back leads the rest of her team to follow her footsteps where they uncover a grisly medical abyss.

Co-directors and co-stars Nicholas LaMantia and Brandon Keenan shot the film over twenty days over the course of two and a half years to complete the 75-minute film in their feature-film directing debut.

Both filmmakers have been active in the Pittsburgh-area film community for over ten years, but this is their first independently-produced feature film.

Completely self-funded, the $35,000 production used mostly Pittsburgh-based actors and crew members as they shot in Western Pennsylvania, New York, in the mountains of North Carolina and at the West Virginia State Penitentiary.

The film also features a cameo from Richard Christy (The Howard Stern Show, Guardians of the Galaxy: Vol. 2).

More screening and ticketing information will be announced. Check back to www.bodyfarmmovie.com.

Body Farm was a joint production by KVT Productions and Nickel 17 Films.
