What is Swiss Chard?

Swiss chard is simply put the top of a beet that does not grow the bulb root like a beet does. Simply just growing for the greens. We have two varieties this year which are oriole orange and ruby red. We were unable to get organic bright lights so hence the need to change varieties this year.

We passed our Certified Organic field inspection. The next step is to go thru the final review and if everything is found accordingly we should receive our certificate sometime this week or next if no problems are found. This is an exciting moment for us as Cheri has worked so very hard to achieve this certification. We did renew our Certified naturally Grown this year as well which is just as important to give our customers the comfort of knowing their food is free from harmful chemicals and no GMO products are used here ever!

Strawberry time has arrived hooray! The next couple of weeks will be extremely busy in the fields picking strawberries and beginning the fall planting items of gourds, indian corn, pumpkins and such. So we have decided to take a one week break in between the spring and summer shares to help us get this planting done and also to catch up in the fields. Enjoy your week!
