

For immediate release and distribution
10/20/16 just after midnight
Newton Economics statement and open question on U.S. 2016 election
Cory Newton

Worldview A, can be identified as the establishment worldview which supports demand side or supply side neoliberal incrementalism as the key to advancing global integration. Worldview A, promotes American Exceptionalism, international institutions, collective security agreements, and complex interdependence as the basis for an orderly international system.

Worldview B, can be identified as the anti-establishment worldview which supports Mercantilist incrementalism to offset the negative impact of global integration. Worldview B, promotes Realpolitik, structural realism, balance of power, and independence as the basis of security and survival in an Anarchic multipolar system.

Each nominee is 100% qualified and 100% fit to make decisions between bad and worse.

The nominee that will consistently make decisions that have bad consequences, more often than they make decisions that will have worse consequences, is absolutely subjective based on one's world view.

Who do you think will make worse decisions at the shit sandwich buffet?