It's time to make interprofessional collaboration a reality for patients and their families. Join us to find out how.

Our healthcare landscape is changing in ways that profoundly affect patients, families, and providers. Now, more than ever, practitioners must work together as a team to ensure high-quality, safe outcomes for patients and their families. Interprofessional collaborative practice is the key to the future of healthcare – a future where patient-centered, cost-effective, high quality care is the expectation, not the exception.

Collaborative care is not currently the norm in our fractured healthcare system. Achieving successful collaboration is no easy feat - it requires coordinated communication and utilization of the collective skills and experience of the entire team. We must learn to move beyond silos and develop high-functioning teams that use resources more efficiently and keep an eye on the bottom line.

During our Fall Conference, you'll learn best practices for interprofessional collaboration, hear from experts in the field, and brainstorm practical, easily implemented strategies for interprofessional collaboration with nurses, physicians, pharmacists, administrators, educators, and other members of the healthcare team.

It's time to break down the silos, heal the fractures, and connect what's disconnected.

Who should attend?

- Registered nurses at all levels of the profession
- Physicians
- Pharmacists
- Hospital Administrators
- Healthcare workers interested in learning how to achieve real interprofessional collaboration for patients and families
