Reflections for The Thirteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time from Deacon Jim...

The Bible's colorful characters who were called by God to leave everything and do his will were all filled with uncertainty, doubts, and fears. Their faith and trust in God allowed them to take the risk and change their lives.

Most of us feel apprehensive about change from time to time. Facing the unknown can be scary to say the least. We can be comfortable leaving things just the way they are.

As the summer season gets underway, our thoughts stray to sun and fun activities such as family get-togethers, picnics, summer holidays, backyard grill outs, and the rest of the joys of the season. This can be a comfortable time of the year. The last thing we want to encounter is the unexpected or the unknown.

As the summer proceeds through the ordinary time of our church calendar, the longest of the church seasons, it is through the Sunday Gospels and readings that we can and will come to understand how God's work affects our daily living. We must be open to change. As Roman Catholic Christians, we are counter cultural in many ways... especially in the world today. Think about it. It takes a stout heart and a spiritually adventurous spirit to live in the Gospel. We can do it!

This summer, let the Real Presence of Jesus in the Eucharist give you the love and strength to be models of our faith. Allow the colorful and adventurous characters in the biblical readings you hear each and every week inspire you. Let them deepen your faith. Let them enrich your daily living. Let them inspire you to stay and/or get involved...

Have a safe, sun-filled [Son-filled], spiritual summer! + Deacon Jim
