At left, the Albany Covered Bridge near Albany on the Kancamagus Highway crossing over the Swift River. Either side of the Swift River lures in both photographers and anglers.

Puffins, at right, are the arctic equivalent of the Antarctic penguins. The Acadia National Park in Maine is the southernmost tip of the Puffin’s range. The cute birds with the colorful beak are so popular that the Park Service lists “where can I see Puffins?” as its most frequently asked question, and the answer is, you can’t. The birds’ rookeries are normally located pretty far from shore and the tourist areas.
