Shakin' Out the Smiths: Researching a Common Surname

Presented by Nancy A. Calhoun, B.A., B.S., M.S Retired genealogy librarian; newspaper writer, editor and photographer; educator ninnnac@yahoo.com, 405-201-0024, Oklahoma

Interviews with living relatives

- -Ask for dates, places, names for pedigree charts and family group. "Flesh out the bones."
- -Do repeat visits.
- -Ask about photographs, Bibles, documents. These are valuable resources and also prompt memories

Use standard resources

- -Publications: marriages, wills and probates, county histories, military service, city directories, cemeteries.
- -Online resources: Local, military.
- -Documents: Death, social security, land, marriage.
- -Use the "experts" or persons knowledgeable about the area.
- -Professional researchers.

Go to the scene

- -Travel to locality. "Follow the land": People often went to areas similar to where they came from in climate and soil.
- -Visit cemeteries. Who is buried near?
- -Visit local libraries. Look for local resources and family files.

Play the "Name Game"

-Use surnames associated with family:

In laws, marriages: Milraney, Mavety, Collins.

Neighbors, friends: Gribble, Black. Polk, Miller.

- -Look for other family members to confirm find.
- -Tie them to the geography.
- -Search using more unusual given names if their name is common.
- -Naming patterns

Find other relatives doing research

- -Databases
- -County Genweb sites
- -DNA

Double your documentation

Is this really mine? Does it:

- -List names of other family members?
- -List other locations where you know this individual lived.
- -Look for in laws with less common surnames.
- -Double check dates and ages

DNA

Nancy A. Calhoun, B.A., B.S., M.S. ninnnac@yahoo.com
405-201-0024