Joseph Prince clearly communicates to the reader that the promises of protection located in Psalm 91 are relevant and tangible for each of God's children, today. His newest book, The Prayer of Protection breaks down Psalm 91, verse by verse with the intent to strengthen the reader's walk with Christ through the faith building truths that are found within this wonderful chapter in the Bible.

The author points out that our culture breeds fear and weakness, from the constant media frenzy of negativity, to the belittling commentary about our God. This continual saturation of fear mongering can force us into an unfruitful paralyzing state. He asserts that as Christians, we need to stand firm in our hope in the Lord; we need to cling to the Word of God and not allow insecurity to take a stronghold in our lives. The book is divided into twelve chapters. Each chapter carefully inspects a verse or two from Psalm The prevailing message of getting the Word of God into our hearts is emphasized throughout the book, as Pastor Prince writes, "It is so important for you to invest time in getting God's living and powerful Word into your heart.

These illustrations of perseverance serve to provide examples of God in motion. The stories from other's trials create a fantastic sense of applicability that is inspiring. I also enjoyed the depth of which the author explores various words from the verses and uncovers their meaning within the Bible. In so doing, Prince unveils an understanding of the truths to a much deeper level. He continually stresses the importance of quoting the written Word of God, which will, "put up a shield of faith and release power as you declare that your God shall deliver you.. The author reminds us that when the Lord Jesus was tempted in the wilderness, He did not merely "think" about scripture, He spoke it out loud. God wants you Christ-occupied and in faith. He encourages us that worship through praise will activate angelic forces to guard us against all sorts of enemy attacks. Finally, I was drawn into this book simply based upon the sincerity of the grace and mercy message that it contains.

As we know, it is already so difficult to live in this world on a day to day basis, so a book that encourages hope, security, strength, confidence and love through the grounded roots of the gospel of Christ and the written Word of God is a HUGE winner in my mind! As Prince writes, "God has already foreseen the problems that we will face in this day and age, and His protection and covering over us is all-encompassing.

It also beckons to be read in an intimate small group where transparency within the setting would allow the Spirit of God to break chains, bring down walls of insecurity and draw people together through the chord of Christ. Whether you read this book in a quiet devotional setting with the Lord or in tandem with others, I would highly recommend you read it! He also provides a link within the book that will provide answers to the perplexing suffering of Job through a free audio message of bonus content.

The opinions within this review are my own; I was not required to write a favorable review. Nov 24, Paul C. I have no words. But I'll try anyway. This book has very much blown my mind like no other book I've come across. I have never read a book which manages to insult so many different people in so many different generations, as this reading will prove offensive to anyone who suffers, anyone with diseases like AIDS, anyone with an addiction, and anyone who takes the New T I have no words.

I have never read a book which manages to insult so many different people in so many different generations, as this reading will prove offensive to anyone who suffers, anyone with diseases like AIDS, anyone with an addiction, and anyone who takes the New Testament NT in historical account seriously. But Joseph Prince has succeeded in doing just that. Prince spits on the grave of the apostle Paul and the early church martyrs by saying that they did not have to die but chose to do so in order to be with God faster. But they could have lived long and full lives, having fruitfulness his word even in old age. He says that although Job suffered, this is totally abnormal for those in Christ and shouldn't happen.

In all my past reviews I have engaged a book with an open mind, looking for the good even when it's hard to find. That said, there is no good in this book. I hate to give very bad reviews but this book is not just bad in theology but is also bad in writing style, choice of words, and terrible for its self-promotion. That the editors didn't point this out to him is beyond me-maybe they didn't care? But these testimonials were not excerpts but full pages which occurred in every chapter. Prince evidently needed to fill up his pages; why 'not' be self-indulgent and insert self-promoting testimonials in which people thank God for him and his preaching of the "true gospel?"

He informs us that every Christian has the choice to choose when they die and mocks Christians who think that death just happens to some and we can't control it. Laziness is also evident in the writing style, as in many parts of the book it feels as if Prince is trying to teach a very small child big grown up things. The tone of the book switches back and forth from a type of over-polished mechanical tone to a very joyous pep-talk that reminds me of someone simply trying to hype up a crowd.

These phrases like "Hallelujah! Isn't God great! Joseph Prince evidently has forgotten which side of heaven he lives on. According to the reading we are not as Christians to experience any discomfort and no amount of suffering. Uncountable exegetical fallacies: there are simply too many to count I plan on having a few posts dedicated to the individual texts themselves which are it seems on every page. Hyper-triumphalism can be found on every page. The book is highly offensive as Prince as noted at the start insults many different people. Anyone who is going through hardship is doing so according to this book because of lack of faith, or because they haven't learned to activate God's angels. In one chapter he makes absurd claims that we have authority over death in that we not God control and determine when we will die. He states that "Jesus died a young death so that we can live a long life" and that "All of us have a free choice to use our faith to believe God for a long life. How long a life?"

That depends on you--according to your faith and satisfaction be it unto you" p. This is insulting to any Christian who has lost a Christian family member or friend prematurely, as it pretty much says they did not activate some special authority and were not in the special realm Prince apparently is in in which he controls when he will die. The amount of people he insults is inexcusable and unforgivable Prince evidently does not know what it means to be pastoral, though he, in fact, is a pastor. For anyone who experiences danger, they simply haven't activated the Protector's protection. If this is true, Christians in China need Prince's book and theology! They simply haven't activated God's angels; or perhaps the Christians who give their lives in martyrdom don't pray Prince's pray of protection and don't live in the realm he is in in which one can decide when one dies!

The NT shows us we are to live between the tension between glory and suffering and informs us of the expectedness of Christians to suffer. The Western church seems to not want to hear that, while Joseph Prince in his book would blatantly deny this! Here he writes a most peculiar statement: that "Our Lord Jesus died young so we may live long" p. That sounds really great, but to anyone half-serious about exegesis this is an obvious and flat-out imposition to Scripture. Because you have made the Lord your refuge, no plague will come near your dwelling. Protection from strains of viruses that science does not yet have a cure for--Ebola, Zika, or AIDS--is God's promise to you and your household p. This is an insult to any Christian suffering from a disease listed above, as it implies your lack of faith and not God's sovereignty or something you're doing stands in the way of you being healed.

Here Prince is giving false hope to those who are suffering. There is safety and protection when we draw near to Him and dwell in His sweet presence, His Word, and His house p. It's important to note that Prince is not talking about a kind of spiritual protection but a very literal one. He has equated God's forgiveness with God's healing. He, throughout the whole book, notes that he believes Christians should never have to suffer--they only allow themselves to suffer. From p. Strange: I always thought it was about God finding the nonredeemable the sinner and bringing him or her back to his flock. I guess generations of church history got it all wrong. After reading the book at hand I don't think it's speculative to say Prince has a fear of suffering and a fear of not being protected.

Prince has a very strange and scary preoccupation with being protected from any type of suffering and an evident to me fear of suffering. As someone passionate about the gospel and about faith in Jesus, I find Prince's notions to be threatening to the foundations of historical Christianity. His newest release promotes an idea which is utterly contra-Christ and his cross, the idea being "Jesus died for you to not suffer and for you to be comfortable. It is evident that Prince does not take half-serious the concept of studying Scripture as he has on every page plunders Bible verses to make them captive to his own pre-determined individualistic theology. He constantly comes up with "unique" interpretations to Bible verses when Bible interpretation states that if you have a "unique" interpretation of a passage, it's probably wrong and could be more rooted in pride than in an actual revelation from God's Spirit.

I write this review as a continuist who believes God still operates in the "spectacular. As a student of the Bible I must say that Prince does preach another gospel, a gospel of "think-positive-thoughts" rather than the gospel of "follow me to be crucified" a pretty negative notion. It does not take a Bible scholar to figure out that Prince is way off in his exegesis. I received my copy from Hachette Book Group for an honest evaluation. Jan 23, Robert Eddowes rated it it was amazing. As always Joseph Prince has release yet another awesome Jesus centered, grace based book on the believers identity and the power of prayer!
