Reclaiming Our Power

Channeler: Emmanuel Dagher Energy Forecast - Reclaiming Our Power

April 2013

Peace and blessings,

It's such an honor and a joy for me to connect with you again! I feel so grateful knowing that no matter where we each are on our own personal journey, we can always pick right up where we left off and align with each other as if barely any time has passed by. It just confirms that we are all truly in this together.

So, how have you been feeling my friend? Are you noticing the energetic temperature being turned up another notch, both in our personal lives and in the collective consciousness? The high amount of movement and activity happening in the ethers is directly sparking a great deal of movement and activity within and all around us.

We have most definitely moved past the time of hibernation and isolating ourselves in deep contemplation for long periods of time. If we haven't been heeding the call already, then it's time to come out of hiding to play and commune with the world again.

Hiding ourselves in any way, and that includes hiding our gifts, talents, wisdom, message, and any other part of our presence, will simply feel impossible. And those who used to find comfort in hiding will find themselves rocked in every way, because what they have been so used to as their default just doesn't work anymore. Although at first it may feel like one's whole identity is being stripped away, this shift moving us out of hiding is creating a new path to ways of being that better aligns with the highest aspect of ourselves.

When the energetic temperature rises as it is now, a call to action usually follows. This call to action is simple: We are being asked to let go of the facades, structures and stories that we and our ancestors have created for ourselves; we are being called to move simply into love.

While being recalibrated to a new heart centered way of existence, it's completely normal to experience our energy and emotions as being all over the place. The key is to allow these energies and emotions to come up as they need to without judgment or trying to contain them. It's also helpful to remember in the back of our minds that our emotions do not define who we really are at our core. If we can just view them as being similar to puffy white clouds in the sky that pass us by, then we can allow them to just move on without attaching ourselves to them.

Releasing the Role of the Victim

Right now, we are being presented with an extraordinary opportunity to retire the victim archetypes that we and our ancestors have identified with all this time.

It's important to take a moment to honor these archetypes for serving in keeping us safe and protected in a world based on survival. However, we now know that a world of only survival is a world that is no longer in alignment with who we are at our core: a Divine Love Being.

As Divine Love Beings we are here to thrive our way into love with ourselves and the world around us. This divine part of ourselves has always known that we are constantly safe and protected, even when the survival based mind may have thought otherwise.

So now, as we thank the victim archetypes that served us up to this point, we can let them go with joy and welcome in our Higher Selves.

Releasing the role of the victim is made up of several important components. The first component to releasing victim consciousness is to accept every person, experience and thing as it has shown up in our lives without trying to change it. By accepting these things, we are not necessarily affirming that we resonate or agree with them, however we are giving ourselves permission to not allow them to define who we really are. Through acceptance we also release the need dwell on the past and what may have been.

The second component to releasing victim consciousness is to let go of blame. Blame comes from a need to make something or someone right/wrong, or good/bad and somehow responsible for what we have experienced. In truth we are the Creator of all of our experience. When we operate from our Highest Selves, and acknowledge ourselves as Creator, we transcend these judgments. From our Highest Selves we navigate our way forward by what feels in alignment for us at that time and what doesn't. Can you feel how this insight alone already feels lighter? By blaming, we keep ourselves held in a time and place that hinders us from evolving and reconnecting with our Highest most Divine Self.

The third component to releasing victim consciousness is to take full responsibility of our lives and well being. Sometimes the victim mindset may display resistance when it hears that we are responsible for our lives and well being, because it had taken comfort in separating itself and buying into the illusion that whatever we need has to come from outside ourselves. It's absolutely normal when this happens. However, by taking responsibility for our lives and well being, we are able to move out of victim consciousness and into Creator consciousness. It is in our Creator consciousness where we are able to move mountains. It is here that we are able to manifest from the most authentic and powerful aspect of ourselves.

By integrating these three components into our lives, we are sure to support our transition out of victim consciousness and into Creator consciousness more smoothly.

Reclaiming Our Power

The greatest power in the world is LOVE. When we embody love, we are the most powerful being in the Universe. Contrary to what we may have been taught, being loving does not mean we are weak, pushovers, or that we look the other way when times get tough. Real love does not hurt, feel hard, or have us giving up or hiding some part of ourselves away. Those are mind structures that simply distract us from real love. Real Love is the constant that flows through all of life. When we choose to be love, we have the whole Universe behind us flowing in the same direction.

Because of societal conditioning, many of us have been hesitant to reclaim our power, because we associate it with being corrupt or controlling. This kind of false power, also known as egoistic power, moves in the opposite direction of love. It likes to separate itself from the whole. Although this kind of power can appear quite real and convincing at times, the truth is that it's not.

Egoistic power is fleeting and will always at some point self destruct in its attempt to push against the natural flow of love and life. Egoistic power thrives on the energy of fear, because it's the only thing convincing enough to move a person out of their true Divine power. Of course this forgetful period is temporary, but we've got to hand it to the energy of egoistic power for putting up a great show in trying to make itself last as long as possible.

Life is always here for us and never against us. We can take comfort in knowing that by choosing not to buy into fear, we have every ounce of the Universe supporting us. Anything that tries to convince us otherwise, such as an idea that we are some small little helpless human being, or are lacking in some way, is just a fleeting illusion.

By surrendering to love, we empower ourselves and those around us to such a degree that we are able to transform even the most egoistic of powers into love.

Power in Numbers

As we move forward, we are being asked to unite in love. That is what's happening right now. We no longer have to be on this journey alone. We no longer have to separate ourselves from each other by race, gender, roles, job titles, sexual orientation, etc. The Universe is consistently giving us opportunities to align with others who share a similar intention of uniting in love. "For where two or more are gathered in love, the greatest power resides."

This is the time to say "YES!" to reclaiming our power and to sharing our gifts with the world.

We are all in this together,

Till next time,

Miraculously yours,

Emmanuel
